THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 12, 1873. The subject of international arbitration as a means for superseding a resort to war was brought before the House of Commons at the evening sitting of Tuesday last by the hon member for Merthyr Tydvil, in a singularly impressive and persuasive speech. The form of his motion was for an address praying her Majesty to instruct her principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to enter into communication with foreign Powers with a view to further improvement in international law and the establishment of a general and permanent system of international arbitration. The object aimed at by the hon, member commends itself at once to the sympathies of all who are interested in the progress of humanity. The only possible difference of opinion on the question relates to the best mode of giving effect to the purpose desired. At present it is questionable whether public opinion in any country, and especially in Continental States, is sufficiently matured to render practicable the proposed method of settling differences between nation and nation in every case which may arise. We must distinguish, however, between the ideas which govern Cabinets and those which prevail with the bulk of the community. A system which shall ensure, or, at any rate, powerfully promote, permanent peace, would no doubt be acceptable to the generality of people in all civilised countries. It is they who bear the burdens of war, they who endure its miseries, and they who, for the most part, know nothing of its rewards. So far, therefore, as the extent of opinion is concerned, there can be but little doubt that the substitution of recognised law for organised force in settling the quarrels between differing Governments would be acceptable. Even in the most martial nations of Europea sentiment in favour of peace is widely cherished. With Governments the state of the case is otherwise. Upon them rests a responsibility which their subjects can hardly be supposed to appreciate. They feel it to be their duty to provide against those contingencies which may possibly threaten, and even involve, the very existence of the independence and separate nationality of the people whom they govern. They are quite aware that sudden storms of passion may arise which they will be held accountable for directing to right issues. They are, consequently, deeply concerned to keep about them, or, at any rate, within easy reach, all that apparatus of organised physical force which they deem requisite to uphold national honour, and to repel whatever may be regarded as a national insult. Governments and their subjects may alike abhor an appeal to the sword, but they usually entertain very different views as to the most likely means of avoiding it.

It must be candidly confessed, however, that the tendency of ruling authorities during the last quarter of a century has gradually developed itself into proportions which no reason can justify. The rivalry in armaments which has sprung up since the Crimean War has attained a pitch which it is frightful to think of. Mr. Richard, in the course of his speech, told the House of Commons that the cost incurred by the nations of Europe for the maintenance of military establishments, together with the interest on the debts contracted for warlike purposes, amounted annually to not less than £550,000,000; and that within the last twenty-two years the debts of European States had increased by the enormous total of £1,500,000,000. We are afraid that this competition still goes on, and that, as the hon. member said, the military expenditure of Europe, which has doubled itself within the last thirty years, bids fair to again double itself in the next thirty years. This, how-ever, is only one aspect of the case. The withdrawal of four millions of men in the prime of life from productive industrial pursuits, the demoralisation thereby engendered, the occasional wars which ensue, and the awful misery they inflict upon society, add incalculable weight to every motive which prompts us to seek, if possible, some means for putting an end to so devastating an evil. The proposal to substitute arbitration for war in the settlement of international disputes is not a new one. It has been resorted to, under one form or another, in several cases, and not without a gratifying amount of success. But it must also be admitted that the attempt to allay excited passions by means of it has sometimes failed—notably in the Franco-German war—to prevent a resort to sanguinary extremities. Still, as Mr. Gladstone argued, its feasibility has been demonstrated in one case at least. The Genevan Arbitration may not furnish a precedent applicable to the circumstances of all Continental States, but, at any rate, it holds up to them an example of great moral worth. Whether on the strength of it we are entitled to invite other nations to enter into a general compact to substitute the more for the less reasonable method of solving international disputes is a question admitting of some difference of opinion. The majority of the House of Commons on Tuesday night dissented from the position assumed by the Prime Minister, that England has not yet acquired a title to undertake such a mission. Mr. Gladstone gave an assurance that in every particular case that may arise her Majesty's Government would in the future watch for every possible opportunity of using its influence and good offices to the effect contended for by Mr. Richard's motion, as, indeed, it had done for some years past. The less pretentious and ambitious the means resorted to by the British Government, he said, the more efficacious it was likely to prove. Perhaps he may be right; but it does not appear to us that the mode of proceeding suggested is necessarily wrong. There is in it nothing peremptory, nothing really obtrusive, nothing precipitate, if carried out—as it is sure to be by Earl Granville—with delicacy, considerateness, and tact. There can hardly be a doubt that the preparation, by a mixed commission, of a code of international law would be an important step in advance towards a permanent system of international arbitration. Surely a diplomatic movement towards obtaining this result might be initiated by her Majesty's Government, without exposing itself to the charge of meddling unjustifiably with the affairs of other nations. There is no obvious necessity for giving effect to the resolution of the House of Commons in an offensive manner or spirit. And, assuredly, it is time that something were done in the direction indicated by that resolution. That it will arouse the suspicion and jealousy of other Governments we do not believe. Something equivalent to it, it will be remembered, was proposed by the late Emperor Napoleon. His proposal, it is true, was not acceded to; but, at least, the fact of its having been made is not regarded as one of the blots of the Imperial policy. The matter is now committed to the judgment of our Foreign Secretary; and we can entertain no serious misgiving that he will so discharge the duty devolved upon him as to fail in demonstrating that the oneness of purpose between her Majesty's Government and the House of Commons in reference to the resolution passed on Tuesday night admits likewise of a oneness of action in regard of the plan of carrying it

"LES ROSES."

In this graceful picture, by a Belgian artist, we are invited to admire the simple and innocent self-surrender of an Eastern maiden to the delightful sense of floral fragrance. The mind of Lalla Rookh, or whoever she may be, is for the moment absorbed in the enjoyment of a sweet natural perfume, which may have the effect, as is usual, of reviving tender memories and calling up the dearest associations of earlier youth. So we think, at least, from the melting expression of her big black eye. A sensitive female nature is like that crystal vessel to which Lalla Rookh's own poet has elsewhere alluded which Lalla Rookh's own poet has elsewhere alluded—

You may break, you may ruin, the vase if you will, But the scent of the roses hangs over it still.

We shall not attempt to pry into her sentimental experiences of the past. The Shah took care to send home all his Persian ladies before coming to England; so that we had no opportunity of making acquaintance with them and studying the national character in that amiable sex. They would probably, indeed, have been locked up in a chamber, or wranged in a national character in that amiable sex. They would probably, indeed, have been locked up in a chamber, or wrapped in a thick veil, if he had brought them to Buckingham Palace, and we might have known no more about them, in that case, than we do now. His Majesty is a good Mohammedan, and must comply with the rule imposed by his jealous creed and Asiatic race. But he was differently treated, in this respect, by his English hosts and their friends. Wherever he went, in town or country, he saw enough of our fairest and finest country-women: for their race to see him and his diamonds was women; for their rage to see him and his diamonds was beyond all measure. They, too, are fond of smelling at a rose

THE ROSE SHOW.

The Shah could not, in the fortnight and three days of his sojourn in England, be shown everything without exception that is to be seen in London in the fashionable season. Had there been time for a glance at all the customary entertainments of the gay world in our midst, the Shah might have found pleasure in a fête at the Regent's Park Gardens of the Royal Botanic Society, which took place last Wednesday under the presidency of the Duke of Teck. Or he might have been equally gratified with one of the grand flower shows of the Royal Horticultural Society, in their gardens at South Kersington. He would there have admired, as everywhere he must have done, both the English roses and the English ladies, displayed to the very best advantage in our honest English daylight. Roses and ladies are the incessant themes of Persian lyric poctry; and, supposing the Shah to be a reader of Hafiz, he could have quoted some pretty verses, upon this occasion, for the ear of a Princess or Duchess, while strolling under the cool marquee, where those blooming beauties were collected for the public gratification. But the Shah was not there, and so lost his chance. Our Artist was there one day, as the Engraving proves, since he made use of his opportunity to do a Sketch for the adornment of a page in this Number. If the Shah had been present at a Rose Show, and could he have brought Lalla Rookh with him, as suggested in the preceding note, all the company would have been pleased. None would have murmured, with Horace, at the great fuss of his visit—

Persicos odi, puer, apparatus;
Mitte sectari, rosa quo locorum The Shah could not, in the fortnight and three days of his

THE WIMBLEDON RIFLE MEETING.

The fourteenth annual prize meeting of the National Rifle Association began on Monday. It has in former years been opened on the Tuesday of the first week that fell within the month of July, but the number of matches and prizes for competition has made it necessary to take an entire fortnight. The camp of rifle volunteer corps on Wimbledon-common looks very much as in bygone summers, and our page of sketches, made on the camping-ground last week, shows many familiar incidents of that free military village, built with canvas in a few days or hours. There are matters of business, such as the made on the camping-ground last week, shows many laminar incidents of that free military village, built with canvas in a few days or hours. There are matters of business, such as the appointment of markers to attend the shooting-targets; there are also refreshments and amusements to be provided for; and we observe among the latter a novel institution for ball practice at Wimbledon—that of a pair of billiard-tables, under their particular tent. The camp was laid out on this occasion under the superintendence of Captain Salmond, R. E., succeeding Captain Drake, and there is some improvement in the plan and width of its thoroughfares. The Canadian rifemen have pitched their tents near the iron house, with their flag displayed on a lofty mast. The ruling members of the council, Earl Ducie, Lieutenant-Colonel Oxley, and Captain Page, the secretary, Captain Mildmay, and the adjutant officers, Captains Costin and Woodhall, have conducted their work to the general satisfaction. As the shooting was to begin at nine o'clock on Monday morning, a large number of volunteer riflemen took up their abode in the tents on Saturday afternoon. The rain, we fear, during that first night must have disturbed their comfort in camp. There was Divine worship for them in the bell tent on Sunday, when the Rev. Canon Barry preached them an appropriate sermon. the Rev. Canon Barry preached them an appropriate sermon. The first day's shooting was good, Mr. W. C. Fordyce winning the prize in the Alfred series of seven shots at 200 yards, with a score of 28, the highest that could possibly be made; and Mr. C. F. Lowe making 27 points in the extra series at that distance. Captain Easton, of the 105th Lanarkshire, gained a maximum of points in the Alexandra series. The Snider nursery prize, shot for at 500 yards, was equally con-tended for by Sergeant Woodman, 6th Hants, Corporals Sumnal tended for by Sergeant Woodman, 6th Hants, Corporals Sumnal and Leitch, 7th Salop, and Mr. Gott. On Tuesday began the first stage of competition for the Queen's prize, in which Sergeant Bennie, 13th Stirling, made 26 points out of 28, as did also Lieut. Ross, 1st Lanark, and Private David Jones, 11th Glemorgan. The Queen's prize contest, in subsequent stages, was continued on later days. Mr. Cardwell and Mr. Lowe, if no other Cabinet Ministers, visited the common on Wednesday. Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne have also been on the ground. "LE ROI EST MORT—VIVE LE ROI!"

"LE ROI EST MORT—VIVE LE ROI!"

The King never dies; that is to say, the King begins to live as soon as he is dead; such is the doctrine of regal immortality, in the flesh and on earth, which the monarchical system of politics involves, by its rule of hereditary succession. There was once a little Dauphin, or eldest son and heir of a great King of France. When the Royal Sire, with all the Court physicians, the nobles, statesmen, and lackeys; the tax-collectors, lawyers, and soldiers of his realm to help him, was really not able to keep the breath in his body any longer, there was a natural stoppage of the flow of blood in his veins. This was not quite en règle; for blood of such rare quality, which had been transmitted from his ancestors the Capets in a direct lineage, with the special blessing of Heaven, might have been expected to hold on its majestic course, despite the failing mechanism of heart and lungs. And so, in fact, it did; the same precious blood was in another body, that of a younger Capet, who instantly became the King that had only seemed to die. "Le Roi est mort—Vive le Roi!" was the glad cry of his admiring courtiers, who hastened to tell the unconscious little boy what a sudden transformation had occurred, changing him at once into the sovereign person of his late departed father. The poor child, however, was rather frightened by this miraculous accession of the paternal might and glory to his small infantine being. As the high officers of State, with a Prince nearest of kin to his Majesty, and with a cowled Churchman to assure him of Divine grace, entered the presence of this very juvenile potentate, he wept in terror and clung to the knees of his nurse. This scene of French history was beheld four centuries later, only with the mind's eye, by an English artist named Marcus Stone, who forthwith took up his painting brush, and cleverly put the affair on canvas, for the Royal Academy Exhibition of 1873. So it appears in our Engraving, Academy Exhibition of 1873. So it appears in our Engraving, which will be acceptable to many readers. But in France, just now, the King is neither alive nor dead.

(From our Correspondent in Paris.)

Thursday, July 10.

The Shah of Persia has at length arrived, and his sayings and doings and diamonds have quite eclipsed all other matters whatsoever. His Majesty reached Cherbourg at half-past eight on Saturday evening, after a tolerably fine and speedy passage from Portsmouth. Count Pujol, the representative of General MacMahon, and a number of other dignitaries belonging to the port, at once hastened on board, and were received by the Shah in the spacious saloon of the Rapide. Mutual compliments were exchanged, after which the deputation retired, and left the illustrious visitor to the repose he must have sorely needed. A display of fireworks served to divert popular attention till the small hours. At nine o'clock the next morning the Shah disembarked by means of a superbly decorated barge, and proceeded direct to the train, which was drawn up at a short distance from the landing-stage. The journey to Paris occupied about eight hours and a half, without including the time taken up by several stoppages; and the train arrived at the Passy station, which had been very tastefully decorated for the occasion, at about twenty minutes past seven. Here the Shah was received by Marshal MacMahon, General Ladmirault, and their respective staffs, and was further welcomed at the moment of alighting by the thunders of a Royal salute from Mount Valérien. Great effort; were made by the crowd to catch even a glimpse of the guest whose coming had set all Paris on tiptoe with expectation, but the immense body of troops stationed on the ground rendered this a matter of the utmost difficulty, and it is doubt ful whether many of the assembled thousands were able to gratify their desires in this respect. The Shah and Marsha MacMahon, entering an open carriage, dashed off, attended by an escort of heavy cavalry, towards the Arc de Triomphe, where his Majesty had 'to accept the greetings of the Municipality, who were there congregated. For this purpose he alighted, but the interview was an exceedingly brief one; and, once more re-en cipality, who were there congregated. For this purpose he alighted, but the interview was an exceedingly brief one; and, once more re-entering his carriage, he proceeded onwards to the Palais Bourbon, where he was received by M. Buffet. The number of people assembled to witness his arrival was immense, but no enthusiasm was displayed; and, indeed, the only expressions heard on all sides were those of disappointment at not having been able to obtain a better view owing to the omnipresent military. There were no official illuminations in the evening, but several private buildings made a most gorgeous display, and the boulevards were thronged to an unusual degree with people all busily discussing the Shah.

On Monday his Majesty remained quietly at home during the morning, reposing after the fatigues of his journey, but in the afternoon he drove along the whole length of the Boulevards in an open carriage. The day was magnificent; but, owing probably to the intense heat, there were very few people out at the time, and he attracted but little attention. From the Boulevards he proceeded to the Bois de Boulogne, where he visited the Jardin d'Acclimatation, and then strolled about the lake. At five o'clock on Tuesday he left by road for Versailles, and arrived at his destination shortly before six. After calling on several official personages, including Marshal MacMahon and M. Euffet, he drove through the gardens in company with the Marshal, and witnessed the preparations for the display of fireworks in his honour. Returning to the palace, he was entertained at a state banquet in the magnificent Gallerie des Glaces, and was then conducted to the grand stand prepared for him overlocking the Bassin de Neptune, where the fireworks were let off. The Shah drove off shortly after eleven, but it was far into the small hours of the morning before the last of the multitude congregated at Versailles were able to effect their departure for Paris, owing to the great strain put upon the railway company. Yesterday afternoon the Sha of the multitude congregated at Versailles were able to effect their departure for Paris, owing to the great strain put upon the railway company. Yesterday afternoon the Shah received the members of the Corps Diplomatique, at the Palais Bourbon. To-day (Thursday) he is present at the great review in the Bois de Poulcigne, in which nearly a hundred thousand men are to take part. One fact seems to have struck everyone who witnessed his progress in England as well as in France, and that is the silence which prevails amongst the crowd here whenever he makes his appearance in public. It may be due to the fact that people are too eager to see him to think of cheering; but it cannot fail to strike him unfavourably. However, the French journals, with their passion for self-glorification, make the most of it, and roundly assert that he is most favourably impressed with the quiet politeness of the French, after the boisterous roughness of the English. Whether he is or not, is, of course, a secret locked in his own breast.

Even the Assembly have been affected by the Shah. On Monday a complaint was made by M. Villain that the members present at his Majesty's arrival the preceding day had not been treated with due attention and respect, but had been elbowed aside by people vested in a little brief authority. He proposed that they should all go down in a body to to-day's review, and after some discussion his proposal was adopted. Apparently encouraged by his colleague's success, another member of the Left, M. Lamy, brought forward in turn a motion, but one of a more patriotic and more stirring character. He demanded permission to question the Government as to the advisability of putting an end to the state of siege, and moved that this matter should be taken into consideration on Monday. However, a crushing majority decided that his application was premature, and that it should not be again brought forward till the middle of November.

If it had not been for the Shah, there is no doubt that the duel between MM. Ranc and de Cassagnac would have been the all-engrossing topic this week. The encounter, after as many preliminary meetings and consultations on the part of the seconds as would have sufficed to arrange the articles of a diplomatic treaty, took place, at Essanges, in Luxembourg, on Monday. The first reports which reached us here were contradictory in the extreme—the different papers ascribing the victory to the champion they favoured. However, the official report of the seconds has been promulgated, and sets forth that the duel, which was fought with swords, took place at three o'clock in the seconds has been promulgated, and sets forth that the duel, which was fought with swords, took place at three o'clock in the afternoon; that at the outset M. de Cassagnac received a wound in the lower part of the arm, and that, on the combat being renewed, M. Ranc, in turn, received a thrust in the same region, incapacitating him from continuing the contest. This document wound up with the declaration that the seconds considered honour was satisfied. Nevertheless wine nearly such of sidered honour was satisfied. Nevertheless nine people out of ten one meets are wicked enough to express their regret that the result was not more serious, on the ground that both the parties concerned are public nuisances standing in need of a

By the arrival of the Overland Mail we have advices from Melbourne to May 20. Parliament assembled for the dispatch of business on May 13. The Viceregal speech was delivered by Sir George Bowen. The prosperous condition of the colony and the satisfactory state of the public revenue were alluded to in congratulatory terms, and several measures having for their object the further development of the resources of the country were promised. In the Legislative Council the reply to the address was carried; and in the Legislative Assembly there was but a short, desultory debate. The bill for mining on private property, which last Session passed the Legislative Assembly and was rejected by the Legislative Council, is again to be introduced; and the Land Act Amendment Bill, which was dealt with in a similar manner. One of the provisions of this measure is to increase the maximum area allowed for selection from 320 to 640 acres. Provision is to be made for the further extension of the railway system, and in all probathe further extension of the railway system, and in all probability the Session will not close without a line to Gipps Land being authorised. NEW ZEALAND. The mail from New Zealand brings despatches which throw some light on recent telegrams from that colony reporting that great uneasiness prevailed in consequence of the attitude of the Maories. It appears that the fears of a general native rising were unfounded, the murders and outrages complained of having been committed by a small party of Maories whose land had been confiscated. Three men who were working near to the boundary of this land were treacherously fired upon, and one of them was shot and his body afterwards mutilated. The murderers afterwards fired upon another party of workmen, but none of them were injured. The Government had demanded the surrender of the murderers from a native chief with whom they had taken refuge, and who had given shelter to other outlaws, and, his replies being unsatisfactory, a committee of settlers had been appointed to "watch the Government." Several influential chiefs had come forward to denounce the crime and deman d the surrender of the criminals.

The annual flower show in connection with the Window Gardening Society of Westminster was held on Tuesday in College-garden, under the direction of Lady Augusta Stanley. An influential gathering of ladies and gentlemen, together with a large muster of the working classes, indicated the success which has attended the efforts of the society for the past year. The competition was divided into three classes, the first being for working men or women; the second for children in the various local schools for the poor; and the last for the inmates of the parish workhouses and Westminster Hospital. Lord Shaftesbury distributed the awards, consisting of handsomely-bound books, together with sums of money ranging from 6s. to 1s. 6d.—The Hon. Mrs. Percy Wyndham distributed the to 1s. 6d. — The Hon. Mrs. Percy Wyndham distributed the prizes at the Clerkenwell Flower Show and Industrial Exhibition, held on Thursday week. This exhibition outrivalled any of its predecessors in the quality of the plants shown. These, moreover, were supplemented by a number of articles, telling of leisure hours assiduously employed, such as specimens of art, needlework, and modelling. In the last-named class of objects was a small steam-engine, the piston, beam, and other irc nwork of which had been neatly manufactured by a policeman out of a poker with which a refractory prisoner of his had essayed to dash out his brains.

The number of births and deaths registered in London last week was 2151 and 1198 respectively. Tand the deaths 243 below the average. The births were 40 e. The deaths from diarrhoe, which in the six previous weeks had slowly increased from 12 to 22, rose last week to 68; the average number is, however, 138. The favourable condition of the public health, remarks the Registrar-General, depends very much upon the action of the sanitary authorities of the water companies; the utmost purity of the water supply is required. Diarrhees should be treated at once, otherwise it may turn to cholera; this applies especially to children. There was 1 death from smallpox, 33 from measles, 11 from scarlet fever, 7 from diphtheria, 43 from whooping-cough, and 24 from different forms of fever; 5 were certified as typhus, 12 as enteric, and 7 as simple continued for an analysis. the respiratory organs and phthisis were 341, being 24 above the corrected average; 165 were referred to phthisis, 89 to bronchitis, and 65 to pneumonia. To different forms of violence 38 deaths were referred; 30 were the result of negligence or accident, including 12 from fractures and contusions, 2 from burns and scalds, 5 from drowning, 1 from prices and 6 from a fracture of the control of and scalds, 5 from drowning, I from poison, and 6 from suffo-cation. The death of a female, aged thirty-three years, was referred to "the sting of a bluebottle fly, charbon labialis, five days." Five cases of suicide and 3 of infanticide were re-gistered. Three of the deaths from fractures and contusions, gistered. Three of the deaths from fractures and contusions, resulting from negligence or accident, were caused by horses or vehicles in the streets. The widow of a sawyer died on Thursday, at 104, Rotherhithe-street, from "natural decay," whose age was stated to be 101 years. The mean temperature was 61.6 deg., and slightly exceeded the mean for the corresponding week in fifty years.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

The usual sacrificial act of eliminating measures from the order-book in the beginning of July has been duly performed in the Commons by Mr. Gladstone; but it was wanting in the element of actuality, and therefore of solemnity. It seemed that, instead of the large measures which really, and in fact, stand in the way of the prorogation, a number of bills which have been long "quietly inurned," because they had months ago lost all vitality, were raked up for the purpose of being formally cast away, and therefore no notion of what is absolutely to be done in the way of legislation by Aug. 2 was afforded. Folk Parliamentary would have liked to know what is to become of the Education Amendment Bill and the one Rating Bill of the original trilogy which is left, which are taken to be doomed. Curiously enough, on that occasion, when the Premier was pointing out that every moment of the Parliamentary time left was being cut and curtailed members rose in numerous succession and asked that Government would give them days for airing their hobbies. The absurdity went so far that Mr. Donald Darrymple had the temerity to demand a special opportunity for bringing on his romantic Habitual Drunkards Bill, his pretext being that its second reading was set aside by the Ministerial crisis in March last. With a certain grim politeness, Mr. Gladstone parried all the attacks made on the precious time of the Session, giving no hope that he could prevent private members' measures lapsing along with his own into the limbo that awaits them.

Everyone knows that the Judicature Bill is the one measure to which the Government could look back with satisfaction when the Session has ceased. A crafty design had evidently been laid by the leaders of the Opposition to set aside this bill, so that in the recess there would be one universal cry that the Session was all barren. The attack was opened by Mr. Disracli with great skill. Nothing could have been more gentle than his treatment of the Judicature Bill in the abstract. practically the discussion was not continued. The second act of the Opposition was subsequently performed in the Lords, with Lord Cairns as the principal actor. Daringly irregular, he came forward to challenge and to discuss a matter which was actually under the consideration of the other House, and he practically sought to order the Commons not to proceed with a piece of legislation on which they were engaged. This he did with an ingenuity and a subtlety which were consummate, for he eluded the apparent irregularity by asserting that he was interposing to prevent an assault on the privileges of the House of Lords. The cry of "Privilege!" has been time out of mind a war-cry in both Houses; and doubtless Lord Cairns thought that it would be caught up with enthusiasm by the Peers. However that may have been, it was not his fault if their Lordships were not stirred to indignation, for his speech was an aggregation of have been, it was not his fault if their Lordships were not stirred to indignation, for his speech was an aggregation of every rhetorical art which could stimulate angry feeling—it was haughty, bitter, sarcastic, contemptuous, venomous; it seemed as if he was in a state of personal pique, and would spare no man in his wrath. Nevertheless there were times during his speech when his taunts and gibes were render more biting by the iciness of his tone and manner; while his outbreaks of indignation were the more forcible by the contrast. Whatever other effect he produced, one is certain—namely that he took the Lord. effect he produced, one is certain—namely, that he took the Lord Chancellor by surprise, for he never expected that the question of "Privilege" would have been so craftily raised; and for once Lord Selborne was feeble and ineffective, his reply being mostly Lord Selborne was feeble and ineffective, his reply being mostly apologetic and deprecatory only.

It is to be noted that the Government has got into an odd way of suffering defeats, or just escaping by "flukes" from defeats. An instance of the latter was to be found during the debate, which is everlasting and nearly diurnal, on the Judicature Bill. Observers of the proceedings on this measure must have come to the conclusion that there prevails a strong feeling of antagonism in all parts of the House to the law officers of the Crown, who have the conduct of this measure, and every opportunity is taken to show that the sneering and haughty manner of the Attorney-General, not in the least concealed by studied attempts at outward courtesy, is resented, and that the boisterous at outward courtesy, is resented, and that the boisterous audacity of the Solicitor-General is the subject of half-contemptuous mirth. It comes about, therefore, that many a division has been taken which would in other circumstances have been foregone. On a particular day the Attorney-General had proposed an amendment—no matter what—which all the lawyers, or nearly all of them, combined to protest against; and the greater part of the House—to wit, all the Opposition and many Liberals—flung itself into a contest which soon became a fray Taberals—flung itself into a contest which soon became a fray in the Parliamentary sense: noise, shouts, cheers, and yells, sharp angry speeches and loud cries of "Divide!" making up a clamour which would have been worthy of Pandemonium, if the components of that assembly could have so far forgotten that the "Princes of Darkness are gentlemen" as to kick up an unseemly row. The Ministerial "whips" flitted about, anxious, with "distraction in their aspect," soon to be succeeded by an appearance of absolute consternation, and it was easy to be perceived that if a division had been taken on the amendment the Government would have been stupendously beaten. A dodge Liberals—flung itself into a contest which soon became a fray Government would have been stupendously beaten. A dodge was accordingly resorted to; and, though it was earlier than the usual time for breaking off proceedings, a lawyer—waiter on the Government, who sits always just behind the Prime Minister, and within whispering distance—received a hint to move to report progress, which he did with the eager start of obedience which is characteristic of his species. The malcontents, who saw their design about to be frustrated, were furious, but enough men were found to support the motion for contents, who saw their design about to be frustrated, were furious, but enough men were found to support the motion for striking work for the time, so the catastrophe to the Government was this time averted. Then on another occasion a Liberal member, leading a band of Liberal members, assisted by seven Conservatives or so, put the Ministry into an actual, if not a very large, minority. So practically inapt, if not absurd, was Mr. Henry Richard's motion on international arbitration, that, beyond the Premier's reply to the speech of the mover, there was no real debate; and the impression was complete and general that there would be no division. But, with a sort of malicious glee, Mr. Richard resolved to take advantage of the opportunity to enter his fancy motion on the journals of the House, and he forced on a division. The discussion had concluded at least an hour earlier than was expected; the House was thin; none of the leaders of the Opposition had been present during the sitting; most of the Cabinet Ministers and most of the officials of the second rank were absent; and even the second Ministerial "whip" had for once allowed himself the relaxation of a little festivity, and only arrived in time to perform his function of "telling," and therefore too late to perform his other, still more important, duty of "whipping." Forty-six members of the Opposition and forty-two loyal Liberals supported the Government; but the revolt from the Ministry was so great that they were left in a small minority, and another proof was given of the waning of a small minority, and another proof was given of the waning of their influence over their party, and the decline of the "strongest Administration that ever existed."

PARLIAMENTARY SUMMARY.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

On Friday, the 4th inst., Lord Redesdale moved an address to the Crown praying her Majesty to bestow certain legal life peerages. Earl Granville, while generally in favour of such a reform, thought the present proposal would not succeed. Lord Salisbury argued warmly in favour of strengthening the House as proposed, and combated the fears of Earl Granville regarding the present metion. Among others, Lord Reselvery approved as proposed, and combated the fears of Earl Granville regarding the present motion. Among others, Lord Rossbery approved of the scheme. Lord Cairns, though supporting the motion as far as it went, moved the previous question, on the ground that it dealt with only one portion of the subject. The Lord Chancellor favoured the amendment. Lord Redesdale ultimately withdrew the motion. The Law Agents (Scotland) Bill was read the second time, after a brief discussion, during which the Duke of Richmond indicated several amendments.

The Earl of Shaftesbury moved, on Monday, the second reading of his bill for the prevention of frauds on charitable funds, by requiring the registration of all charitable societies, the publication of their accounts, and facility of access to the books publication of their accounts, and facility of access to the books in the case of all subscribers. The Marquis of Salisbury, while not objecting to the aim of the bill, thought it would prove utterly unworkable in its present form. Its provisions were of a highly penal nature, and would operate very harshly in the case of those who, in country places, got up small charitable societies, such as clothing clubs and other similar institutions. The Lord Chancellor concurring in this opinion, the Earl of Shaftesbury withdrew the bill. The Royal assent was given by commission to a large number of public and private bills. The Statute Law Revision Bill, the Slave Trade (East African Coasts) Bill, and the Slave Trade Consolidation Bill were read the second time; the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Bill went through Committee; and the Shrewsbury and Harrow Schools Property Bill and the Agricultural Children Bill were read the third time and passed.

The Earl of Kimberley, on Tuesday, moved the second reading of the Canada Loan Guarantee Bill, which was supported by the Earl of Carnarvon and the Duke of Buckingham, and passed without a division. Their Lordships then took into consideration the reasons assigned by the House of Commons for disagreeing with their Lordships' amendment on the Railway and Canal Traffic Bill providing an appeal from the Commons. The Marquis of Ripon moved that the amendment should not be insisted upon, which was opposed by the Duke of Richmond; and on a division being taken 79 voted for the retention of the amendment, against 63 for its abandonment. Lord Cairns then called attention to the changes introduced into the Judicature Bill by the House of Commons, and inquired whether the Government intended during the present Session to lay before Parliament a complete scheme for regulating appeals in Scotland and Ireland analogous to the appellate system for England. His Lordship contended that in altering the Judicature Bill as they had done the Commons have been guilty of a clear, palpable, and most s

Dukes of Argyll and Richmond and Earl Granville having spoken, the subject was dropped.

The Earl of Carnarvon, on Thursday, called attention to some statements which appeared in the public journals respecting the Ashantee war. The Earl of Kimberley regretted that the Government had received no information by this mail upon the subject which would enable them to say whether or not the statements were correct. At the same time, he was of opinion that the statements would turn out substantially true. After a few words from the Earl of Lauderdale, the subject dropped. Several bills upon the paper were advanced a stage. Several bills upon the paper were advanced a stage.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

At a morning sitting, on Friday, the 4th, the Judicature Bill was resumed in Committee, and progress was made up to the twenty-fourth clause, which was not finally disposed of. In the evening Mr. Plunket urged the claims of the Irish civil servants to increase of salary. The proposal was opposed by the Government; but the motion was carried against them by 130 to 119. For a second time during the day Mr. Whalley was called to order by the Speaker for ventilating his own and the Tichborne claimant's grievances. An effort was made by Mr. Gordon and other members to obstruct the Entailed Estates Bill, and they succeeded to a certain extent as the House re-Bill, and they succeeded to a certain extent, as the House resumed immediately after going into Committee on the bill, which was further postponed till Thursday, as was also the Stipendiary Magistrates Bill.

Stipendiary Magistrates Bill.

The House witnessed, on Monday, a "massacre of the innocents." The Trade Marks Registration Bill, the Prevention of Crime Bill, and others relating to bribery, Irish fisheries, and public prosecutors, are to be postponed till next Session. The Judicature Bill was again taken in Committee, and considerable progress made. The Military Manceuvres Bill was read the second time, the Militia (Service) Bill passed through Committee, and the Public Meetings (Ireland) Bill was rejected without a division.

The Judicature Bill was resumed in Committee at a massion.

The Judicature Bill was resumed in Committee at a morning The Judicature Bill was resumed in Committee at a morning sitting on Tuesday, and considerable progress made, the fifty-fourth clause having been reached. At the evening sitting Mr. Richard brought forward the subject of international arbitration. Mr. Gladstone, though entirely approving the aim of the motion, doubted whether it was not more likely to be forwarded by individual acts, like the Geneva Arbitration, than by the more ambitious policy of attempting to draw all foreign Powers into general communication. With regard to Great Britain, he pointed out that there was gradually growing up a practice, which in time would harden into rule, of availing ourselves of every opportunity of promoting the peaceful settlement of all disputes. Sir W. Lawson spoke in favour of the motion; after which Lord Enfield moved the "Previous Question." On a division, however, the House declined to adopt this mode of evading a decision by 98 to 88; and Mr. Richard's resolution was then put and carried was then put and carried.

Wednesday afternoon was occupied with Sir Dominic Corrigan's bill to prevent the sale of liquor in Ireland on Sundays. The measure was rejected by 140 votes to 83. The Burials Bill was talked out. The General Police and Import (Sectland) Acts Amendment Bill and the Civil Bills burials bill was talked out. The General Police and Improvement (Scotland) Acts Amendment Bill and the Civil Bills, &c. (Ireland), Bill were read the second time; the Married Woman's Property Act (1870) Amendment Bill (No. 2) was passed through Committee; the Lords' Amendments to the Sites for Places of Religious Worship Bill were agreed to; and the Tramways Provisional Orders Confirmation Bill was read the third time and passed.

and the Tramways Provisional Orders Confirmation Bill was read the third time and passed.

On Thursday, in reply to Sir Stafford Northcote, Mr. Chichester Fortescue said his attention had naturally been called to the letter which the hon, member for Derby (Mr. Plimsoll) had written to the secretary of the Merchant Shipping Commission. "I have called upon him," added Mr. Fortescue, "to state to me, as the person appointed to look after the administration of that department, and also to protect the public officers serving under that department, to furnish me with the names of the 'many officers' of the Board of Trade' whom he accuses of corruption, and the grounds and nature of his charges, or, if he still perseveres in his refusal to do so, I have asked him to retract those charges. I have not yet received an answer." Mr. Gladstone made a statement as to the intentions of the Government with respect to the Judicature Bill. Since Tuesday last serious doubts had been entertained, in quarters entitled to much authority, as to whether the proposals Government with respect to the Judicature Bill. Since Tuesday last serious doubts had been entertained, in quarters entitled to much authority, as to whether the proposals which the Government intended to make with respect to the Irish and Scotch appeals was consistent with the privileges of the other House of Parliament. It was difficult to say what was meant by the "rights of the Peerage," but he thought it was a reasonable opinion that that expression did not point so much to what concerned the duties of the House of Lords collectively as it did to questions affecting the title of individuals to sit in that House. Having quoted a series of cases in which the privileges of the one House were affected by the legislative proceedings of the other without objections being raised on that score, the right hon, gentleman said he was sure that every member would desire to avoid conflict with the House of Lords, which had voluntarily sacrificed a part of its jurisdiction, and he thought there was a mode by which the desired end could be attained. He proposed to retain in the amendments everything that related to the new court of appeal and to all collateral measures. If that was done they would forbear to ask the House to adopt those portions which related to the House of Lords. If that House desired well to this measure their Lordships would find ready to their hands a Court evidently meant for the three kingdoms, but nothing that would destroy their jurisdiction on Scotch and Irish appeals which they might think proper to surrender. He should propose to recommit the bill on the report, so that no time might be lost, and in the course of the evening the Government would make the necessary alteration in the amendments. He thought this would be an act of courtesy and conciliation to the House of Lords, while it would preserve the title of this House to deal with the subject. Mr. Bouverie thought that the claim of the House of Lords was unfounded, for in the Acts uniting Scotland and Ireland to England—Acts which emanat Mr. Bouvene thought that the claim of the House of Lords was unfounded, for in the Acts uniting Scotland and Ireland to England—Acts which emanated in the House of Commons—the jurisdiction of the Upper House was much interfered with in the case of the Irish and Scotch peers. Mr. Disraeli said there was no identity between the precedents which the Prime Minister had quoted and the instance to which he wished to apply them, for in none of them could there have been a collision between the Houses of Parliament. Only one of them—viz. the Sentennial Act—seemed to have there have been a collision between the Houses of Parliament. Only one of them—viz., the Septennial Act—seemed to have the semblance of a precedent, but that referred not to the House of Commons, but to the Parliament of England. The privileges of the House of Lords did not rest upon Blackstone, whose passage was merely quoted in support of an argument. When the House had had time to digest the queer proposition of the Government, no doubt they would come to a decision which would maintain the privileges of both Houses. A deputation has waited upon the Marquis of Ripon and Mr. Forster, to ask that a school of science and art and a library might be furnished at Bethnal-green Museum. The Lord President urged that, so long as the pictures of Sir Richard Wallace remained in the museum, there was no space for a school, but those pictures were themselves the best posfor a school, but those pictures were themselves the best possible encouragement of art. an article headed "Scientific Results of the Month," which appeared in our issue of Saturday last, it was stated that "Messrs. Smith and Locke's method of casting metals under compression differs very little from the method employed, some years since, by Sir Joseph Whitworth, unless it be in some immaterial particulars." It was also stated that "this is one of the inventions which have been carried across the Atlantic, and then re-imported as a novelty." Mr. J. J. Ch. Smith, the patentee of "the Smith and Locke Process for Casting Metals by Continuous Pressure." writes denying this statement by Continuous Pressure," writes denying this statement, and we willingly insert his correction. He says:—"I beg to inform you that my invention was patented in America in 1867, and complete protection was obtained in 1868. Sir Joseph Whitworth's invention is for compressing cast metal; but I cast metal by compression, and, although the idea in both cases is to gain one end, my process and its results are entirely different from Sir Joseph's. This has been confirmed by the most eminent engineers in this country, and the claims in my patent pronounced valid, in contradistinction to anything contained in the specification of Sir Joseph Whitworth. I am prepared to prove these statements, and to explain to anyone skilled in the subject the details of my process, as exhibited at the company's offices at Ludgate-circus."

of Ecossais completely spoilt the July and The presence of Ecossais completely spoilt the July and Chesterfield Stakes at Newmarket last week; and, even with the deeds of Achievement, Lady Elizabeth, and Cantinière fresh in our memory, we are convinced that the son of Blair Athol and Margery Daw is the speediest youngster that has ever appeared on the turf. From the fact of his being always ridden right away from his field, it has been argued that the stable know that he will not struggle if collared at the finish of a race; but we put quite a different construction on these tactics, and think that Mr. Lefevre, being quite uninfluenced by betting considerations, and naturally proud of such a wonder, likes to see him make an example of his opponents. The Cheveley Stakes, in which Prince Charlie gave Blenhoin a year, a stone, and a head beating, was quite the most brilliant race of the meeting. There can be no doubt that "the invincible" had to gallop; still, we fancy that he won pretty easily at the finish, and, had the distance been a little further, would have squandered his field as usual. Tuesday's racing was far superior to that of any other day, though there were some very close and exciting finishes on the Friday. Houghton ran execedingly well, and by his defeat of Falkland at level weights drew renewed attention to the great chance that Uhlan must possess for the Goodwood Stakes. Fordham rode Houghton in the most brilliant style, and the great jockey, who won nine events during the week, never exhibited to greater advantage his wonderful patience and power of making his effort exactly at the right moment.

Messrs. Tattersall put up an immense number of horses during the July meeting; but, with the exception of Mr. Geo's yearlings, there was no sale of any great importance. Thirty youngsters belonging to that gentleman averaged 191 gs., which must be considered very satisfactory when it is remembered that he purchased many of his mares in foal by unfashionable sires. Mr. Vyner gave 1000 gs., the highest price of the sale, for a very nice colt by C Chesterfield Stakes at Newmarket last week; and, even with the deeds of Achievement, Lady Elizabeth, and Cantinière

The M.C.C. and Ground v. Middlesex was played at the commencement of this week, and the club proved too strong for the county, winning easily by 84 runs. There were eight double figures in the first innings of the M.C.C., while Mr. I. D. Walker (40 and 40) and Mr. E. Rutter (16 and, not out, 30) frught hard to avert defeat. The Times says:—"At a meeting of leading persons connected with the staple manufactures of the country, held at Stafford House, on Wednesday, by permission of the Duke of Sutherland, resolutions were adopted in favour of the suggestion for presenting, by subscription, a short line of model railway to the Emperor of China, with a view of creating a sense of the vast benefits to be derived by the introduction of such works."

A scries of important and interesting siege operations took place at Chatham, on Thursday week, in the presence of the Duke of Cambridge and a large number of spectators; the principal features being the explosion of a mine on the new ravelin, followed by attacks on and escalades of Prince Henry's bastion and the Gillingham face of the fortifications. Everything appears to have passed off very satisfactorily.

The matches last Saturday in connection with the Royal Mersey Yacht Club were of unusual interest. The first prize, a £70 cup, was awarded to the Arethusa, 58 tons; and the second, a £30 cup, to the Vanguard, 60 tons. The £50 cup was won by Norman; the £30 cup, for 15 and 20 ton yachts, by the Sunshine; and the £20 cup, for 10-ton yachts, by the Cloud. On Monday there were races for prizes amounting to £225, and on Tuesday the ocean race from Liverpool to Barrow took place.

A general court of the governors of the Royal Humane Society was held, on Wednesday, at the offices, Trafalgar-square—Mr. J. M. Cave in the chair. It appeared from the report of the society's operations for the last half year, which was presented by Mr. Lambton Young, the secretary, that the number of persons rescued by the society since December last had been seventy-six; nine were beyond recovery; and during the same time seven were prevented from attempting suicide; three were referred to this general court for the presentation of the same time seven were prevented from attempting suicide; three were referred to this general court for the presentation of the silver medallion. ### LAW AND POLICE. TRIAL OF THE TICHBORNE CLAIMANT FOR PERJURY.

TRIAL OF THE TICHBORNE CLAIMANT FOR PERJURY.

Two surgical witnesses, Mr. Bernard Holt and Mr. Seymour Hayden, reported, on Friday, the 4th inst., upon the examination of the Claimant made in presence of Sir W. Ferguson, Mr. Canton, and Dr. Sutherland. During a detailed description of all the marks found Mr. Holt made various statements contradictory of the Claimant's own evidence, as well as incompatible with what has been proved respecting Roger Tichborne. The latter had an issue on his arm, and the Claimant professed to have had a seton, but no traces of either could be found on his arms. On the ankles there was no mark of a puncture or a vein opening, though Roger had been bled on both ankles at Canterbury. Witness examined the defendant in court as to the statement that Roger had been bled on the temporal artery, but he could find no marks on either temple. The thumb-nail which has been so prominently put forward as pocaliar to Roger and the defendant Mr. Holt declared to be perfectly normal. Since seeing it he had produced the same appearance on one of his own nails. Mr. Hayden, who indorsed most of Mr. Holt's evidence, stated that it would be possible, in the course of three or four weeks, to produce a thumb like the defendant's. Captain Angell, of the Australian liner Collingrove, deposed to having known Arthur Orton intimately as a boy, also to having seen him at Wapping on his return from South America, and again at Hobart Town. In 1865 Mr. Debinson told him that he had been named an executor in Roger Tichborne's will. He was proud of it, though neither he nor his family had ever knewn the Tichbornes. He afterwards met the defendant at Mr. Holmes's office along with Colonel Lushington and Charles Orton. He acknowledged not recognising him at first, but as the interview proceeded "he began to see signs of Arthur Orton." The captain's final conclusion, as stated to the Court, was that the defendant had lost his identity, and was Arthur Orton without knowing it. There was certainly, he said, a strong res

Scowen, porter at Croydon station, on the London and Brighton Railway, gave an amusing account of having carried a parcel for the defendant from his house to a Mrs. Brand, at 110, Keating-road, Bermondsey. The parcel was taken in by Charles Orton, who said he was "Mrs. Brand's husband."

'The progress of the trial was interrupted on Monday by an application from Dr. Kenealy to grant the defendant a few days' leave of absence, as he was suffering from erysipelas. This, after some discussion, was agreed to. The defendant having left the court, Mr. Thomas King, photographer on the staff of the Stereoscopic Company, was examined as to the peculiarity of the thumb shown in several of the photographs broduced. He attributed it to the fading away of the focus of produced. He attributed it to the fading away of the focus of the lens. Mr. Charles Chabot, the expert in handwriting, stated the result of his examination of three sets of letters submitted to him—the defendant's, Arthur Orton's, and Roger Tichborne's. His general conclusion was that Orton's and the defendant's were in the same handwriting, but that Roger Tichborne's was different from either. He bessed his expire whether defendant's were in the same handwriting, but that Roger Tichborne's was different from either. He based his opinion chiefly on a series of nine peculiarities found in Roger's letters. The original and photographed letters put in were minutely examined by the Court and the jury.

The evidence of Mr. Chabot was continued on Wednesday. He resigned the witness-box for a short time to the Right Hon. Hugh Childers, M.P., who was in Melbourne at the head of the Commissioners of Customs from December, 1853, to February, 1857, and was called to speak to the state of the labour market in Melbourne in the summer of 1854, when the Claimant, as he states, arrived in that port. Mr. Childers was positive that at that time the difficulties respecting sailors, in consequence of the gold diggings, had nearly come to an end; in fact, there were more ships leaving Melbourne than arriving. Mrs. MacAlister, who arrived in this country from Victoria on Tuesday was under examination. She said that before she married Mr. MacAlister she was the wife of Mr. William Foster, by whom Arthur Orton was employed. She was quite certain that the defendant (who was again in court) was. Arthur Orton.

On Thursday Mr. Matthew MacAlister, the husband of the On Thursday Mr. Matthew MacAnster, the husband of the lady examined on the previous day, was in the witness-box. He remembered a stockman named Arthur Orton in Mr. Foster's employment. According to the books, Orton left in October, 1858. After that time witness frequently saw him in Sale. Orton was generally known as "the butcher." He had a rough voice and a cockney accent; there was nothing French in it. Witness had a distinct recollection of Orton, and he and the defordant were the same man; of that he had not the the defendant were the same man; of that he had not the slightest doubt. Some documentary evidence having been produced, the case for the prosecution was closed, and the trial was adjourned to Monday, the 21st, to enable Dr. Kenealy to prepare his speech for the defence.

ice-Chancellor Malins has disposed of an application by Lord Colchester and Sir, Robert Dallas, executors of the will of the late Lord Ellenborough, relative to some Exchequer Bills and cash amounting altogether to £700, and representing interest accumulated on money of suitors temporarily deposited with his Lordship in his capacity as holder of the sinecure office of Chief Clerk of the Court of Queen's Bench, now abolished. It was decided that no valid claim could be made by the executors to the fund.

In the Court of Probate, on Wednesday, the hearing of the case "Farrell v. Gordon" was resumed. The plaintiffs, as executors, propounded the will and ten codicils of Baroness Weld, under which her property, to the amount of about £60,000, was left to Archbishop Manning and other Roman Catholic dignitaries for the benefit of the Roman Catholic Church. The July session of the Central Criminal Court was opened on Monday, with forty-four prisoners for trial. The Deputy-Recorder, in his charge to the grand jury, recapitulated the history of the charge against the Bidwells, Noyes, and Macdonnell, who are accused of having committed the great forgeries upon the Bank of England. In the course of the day true bills were found, and the trial was deferred until the August session. The hearing of the Highgate money-lending case was again postponed, in consequence of the continued absence of Mrs. Easterby, the prosecutrix. George Pearce Hill, a clerk, pleaded guilty to a charge of theft, and was ordered to undergo twelve months' imprisonment. Alfred Cracknell was convicted of having been on some premises with intent to commit a robbery, and was sent to prison for two years. William Cotton pleaded guilty to a charge of fraudulent bankruptcy, and was sentenced to two months' imprisonment, with hard labour. William Berry was found guilty of having made a false declaration in connection with the commutation of a pension, and was awarded four months' hard labour.—At Tuesday's sittings sentence was passed upon the three members of the Goldsmith family whose names have been prominent in connection with charges of fraud and forgery. Montague and Rebecca, who had been convicted of felony, were each sentenced to five years' penal servitude; while Michael, whose offence was misdemeanour only, escaped with two years' hard labour. Joseph Lee, a clerk, and Thomas Parry, a butler, pleaded guilty to charges of forgery, and each was sentenced to five years' penal servitude: A similar punishment was awarded to Edward Lewis, a clerk, who was convicted of having obtained food and lodging under false pretences. Mr. John Pullen, a cattle-dealer, of Chichester, has been summoned, at Guildhall, for sending unwholesome meat to the Metropolitan Meat Market for sale as human food. The defendant is a wealthy cattle-dealer, carrying on business at Chichester. He had a cow which had been suffering for some time from hip disease. On June 12 it was found necessary to have her slaughtered. A portion of the carcass was then dressed and sent up to the London market for sale. The inspector's attention was called to it, and it was condemned. It was urged for the defence that the defendant believed the meat to be good when he sent it up to London, and that he and his family dined off parts of it. Sir Thomas Dakin said there was no doubt, from the evidence of the inspectors, that the meat was unfit for human food. Six months ago, in a speech at the distribution of prizes to the students of the Nottingham School of Art, Mr. Cole announced his intention of retiring from the public service, of which he would in April have completed fifty years. He said that more than twenty years are Lord. said that, more than twenty years ago, Lord Granville, then Vice-President of the Board of Trade, asked him to undertake the superintendence of the Schools of Design. During that period he had served under statesmen of all politics — Mr. Labouchere, afterwards Lord Taunton; Mr. Henley, who was the first to insist that the artisans of this country should Taunton; Mr. Henley, who was the list to insist that the artisans of this country should have means of learning geometrical drawing; Mr. Cardwell, who enlarged the Department of Art into Science and Art; Lord Stanley of Alderley, who transferred the Museum from Marlborough House to the South Kensington Museum, then founded by the Prince Consort; the late Marquis of Salisbury, who instituted the present successful system of science instruction; Lord Granville, who first began the permanent buildings for the South Kensington Museum, and started the idea of the Bethnalgreen Museum, which his successor, the Duke of Buckingham, carried into practical effect, and also caused the new science schools to be built; and the Duke of Marlborough, who induced Mr. Disraeli's Government to make the most liberal and profitable investments of public money purchasing works of art.

Mr. Cole went on to say it was a comfort to him in his retirement that he left the work he had so dearly loved under the Parliamentary protection of the Marquis of Rippen and Mr.

had so dearly loved under the Parliamentary protection of the Marquis of Ripon and Mr. Forster, who were most hearty promoters of science and art among the people. Since 1852 he had witnessed the conversion of twenty limp Schools of Design into 128 flourishing Schools of Art. 5000 pight alasses for drawing had been Art; 500 night classes for drawing had been established for artisans; 180,000 boys and girls were now learning elementary drawing; 1250 schools and classes for science instruction had spontaneously sprung up; the South Kensington Museum had been securely founded as a national centre for consulting the best works of science and art, and as a means of circulating national centre for consulting the best works of science and art, and as a means of circulating art-objects throughout the kingdom. While that Museum itself had been visited by more than 12,000,000 visitors, it had circulated objects of art among 195 localities holding exhibitions, to which more than 4,000,000 local visitors had contributed above £93,000. He visitors had contributed above £93,000. He hoped still to be able to prosecute his work as a volunteer; to assist in the establishment of local Museums, which might draw their supplies from South Kensington, and to do his part in establishing firmly Annual International Exhibitions of Industry as a permanent institution, relying not upon State aid, but on the voluntary support of an educated public, and realising a yearly competitive examination of the practical fruits of the working of the National Schools of

We have left Mr. Cole's summary history of We have left Mr. Cole's summary history of the main work of the Science and Art Department of her Majesty's Committee of the Privy Council on Education to speak for itself, as the best part of his official life is bound up with the proceedings and results above described. His personal biography is soon related for the present occasion. He was born at Bath, July 15, 1808, so that his sixty-fifth year is just completed. Having been educated at Christ's Hospital, he became a clerk of the Record Commission in April, 1823, and was promoted to be Assistant Keeper of the Public Records. While employed in that office, he edited a volume of "Miscellaneous Records of the Exchequer," and "Henry VIII.'s Scheme of Bishoprics;" he also wrote several pamphlets on the reform of the arrangements for preserving historical records, by which he pamphlets on the reform of the arrangements for preserving historical records, by which he helped to procure the establishment of the General Record Office, and the subsequent production of many volumes, under the direction of Lord Romilly as Master of the Rolls, containing most valuable materials of our national history. Mr. Cole also gained, in 1840, one of the four prizes offered by the Treasury for suggestions to carry into effect the penny postage scheme of Sir Rowland Hill, a measure which he had previously furthered by his labours as Secretary of the Mercantile Committee on Postage. At one time, with Sir William Molesworth and Mr. Charles Buller, he was engaged in an attempt time, with Sir William Molesworth and Mr. Charles Buller, he was engaged in an attempt to start a newspaper, called the Guide. He contributed many essays to the Westminster, British and Foreign, and Edinburgh Reviews; composed guide-books, under the name of Felix Summerly, to the picture collections in the National Gallery and Hampton Court Palace; wrote an art-treatise on "Light, Shade, and Colour;" edited the Historical Register and the Journal of Design; and prepared illusand the Journal of Design; and prepared illustrated editions of books for children, as well as an edition, from casts of blocks in the British Museum, of a series of engravings by Albert Dürer. When the late Prince Consort was intent upon his plans for the Great Exhibition of Arts and Industry in 1851, Mr. Cole, who had assisted to organise the yearly exhibitions had assisted to organise the yearly exhibitions of the Society of Arts, was appointed one of the Executive Committee for the Universal Exhibition, this being, in fact, a development of his own suggestion, that the society's annual displays of art-manufactures should culminate in a national one, to be held every fifth year. At the close of the Exhibition of 1851 Mr. Cole was rewarded, not undeservedly, with the rank of Cempanion of the Bath in the Civil Division, while a baronetcy was conferred upon his colwhile a baronetcy was conferred upon his colleague, Sir Wentworth Dilke. He continued his active exertions in the Society of Arts to premote a reform of the patent-laws and other objects beneficial to industry, when, in 1852, he was called to the official service of the Com-upon the reconstitution of its Science and Art Department. He has since held the offices of First Secretary of that department, Inspector-General of its Schools, and Superintendent of its Museum at South Kensington; in which last-mentioned capacity, let us gratefully confess, he has provided a vast amount of various in tellested network for all residents in intellectual entertainment for all residents in London and their country visitors.

The Great Exhibition of 1862 in London, the Paris Great Exhibitions of 1855 and 1867, where he acted as British Commissioner, and the establishment, more recently, of the Annual South Kensington Exhibitions, have repeatedly brought Mr. Cole forward as an official agent of this country in such arrangements of an inter-national character. He is one of the French Legion of Honour and a Commander of the Austrian Order of the Iron Crown. At home, having taken part in many domestic efforts of the Society of Arts to promote scientific, artistic, and technical education, he has received its Albert medal, and has been one of its Vice-Presidents, as likewise of the Royal Horti-cultural Society. Some ten years ago he was chairman of a committee for the advancement of popular instruction in music. He has been concerned, also, in the building of the Royal Albert Hall. Mr. Cole's retirement from public service is now completed, and the Treasury have awarded him the full pension usually have awarded him the full pension usually granted to officers who have completed fifty years of public service. Although Mr. Cole quits the South Kensington Museum, he will continue to assist in promoting the diffusion of science and art applied to productive industry, as the acting Commissioner for the estate purchased out of the surplus funds of the Exhibition of 1851. This estate at present comprehends the Horticultural Gardens, the buildings of the Annual International Exhibitions, and the Royal Albert Hall. Measures are in progress for forthwith commencing the National Training School for Music.

FINE ARTS.

The large and lofty new courts of the South Kensington Museum, designed principally to contain architectural examples—originals and casts—are nearly completed, and will shortly be opened to the public. A description, by Mr. J. H. Pollen, of the examples will also cheatly be applied by the department.

Afine statue, by Mr. W. Story, of "Jerusalem in her Desolation," has been forwarded from Rome, and is on view for a limited time at Messrs. Holloway's galleries in Bedford-street, Strand. The statue is to be placed in the new hollding of the Population. building of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine

Eighteen new subjects have been added to the very interesting collection of pictures at the Crystal Palace by Mr. Vareschagin, illus-trative of Central Asia. One large picture represents the gate of a mosque in Samarcand. Other smaller works are landscape sketches, some of the scenery being remarkable for grandeur. There are also several single-figure studies.

A new picture has been added to the exhibition of works by Gustave Doré, in the gallery, 35, New Bond-street. The subject is "The Night of the Crucifixion" ("Les Ténèbres.")

Mr. Steell, of Edinburgh, has been commissioned to execute a statue of Burns by admirers of the Scottish poet in New York. The figure is to be of bronze and of colossal size; the price, 2000 guineas.

Madame Jerichau, the distinguished Danish artist, wife of the well-known sculptor, has issued invitations to view several of her most important pictures at the gallery of Messrs. Pilgeram and Lefèvre, King-street, St. James's. The collection well deserves a visit. The works are remarkable for variety, force of effect, character, and sentiment; but, as the invitations are of a private nature, we are not at liberty to indulge in detailed criticism.

The annual Belgian exhibition, corresponding to that of the Paris release and the state of the state of to that of the Paris salon and that of our Royal to that of the Paris salon and that of our Loyal Academy, takes place in consecutive years at Brussels, Antwerp, and Ghent. This year it is the turn for Antwerp, and the twentieth triennial exhibition will open on Aug. 10 and close on Oct. 5. The display will comprise works by living artists, Belgian and foreign.

An exhibition of works of art will open at Spa on the 20th inst. and close Sept. 30.

The general committee of the Mill memorial has confirmed the recommendation of the executive committee that a bronze statue of Mr. Mill should be erected in some public situation in Westminster, and that the fund be further devoted to the foundation of scholarships, open the competition of both sexes, in mental science and political economy. Good progress has been made with the project, donations of £50 each having been subscribed to the fund by the Duke of Argyll, Mr. Walter Morrison, M.P., Mr. James Heywood, F.R.S., and the Political Economy Club. Sir John Lubbock, Eart, M.P., is acting as treasurer.

During the month of June the Fishmongers' Company, through their officers, seized at Billingsgate Market, and on board boats lying off that place, 78 tons 16 cwt. of diseased fish, off that place, 78 tons 16 cwt. of diseased fish, unfit for human food. This immense quantity consisted of 88,969 place, 21,800 dabs, 13,244 thombacks, 387 brill, 246 cod, 570 crabs, 21 derees, 2900 gurnets, 8254 haddocks, 3 hake, 50 halibut, 9575 herrings, 1 jack, 4 ling, 454 lobsters, 5090 mackerel, 400 roach, 28 salmon, 6 thate, 4812 soles, 134 trout, 470 turbot, and 4950 whiting; also 159 bushels of periwinkles, 60 of whelks, 1524 gallons of shrimps, 1241bb of eels. mittee of the Privy Council on Education, 12411b. of eels.

THE EAST AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.

A public meeting was held, on Tuesday evening, at Exeter Hall, to protest against the continuance of this inhuman practice, and to welcome the return home of Sir Bartle Frere, welcome the return home of Sir Bartle Frere, the late Special Envoy of our Queen's Government to the Sultans of Zanzibar and Muscat, who was sent to negotiate for the prevention of the slave trade, when Dr. Livingstone's letters, brought to us by Mr. Stanley, had exposed its wholesale cruelties. We have been favoured with a number of sketches made along the shores of the Zanzibar and Mozambique Channels, the northern part of Madagascar, and the Comoro and Johanna islands, where the traffic in negroes kidnapped by Arabs on the mainland of Africa has frightfully increased of late years, the slaves being mostly sold for conveyance to Turkish or Arabian ports in the Red Sea or in the Persian Gulf.

To the reader who would acquaint himself

To the reader who would acquaint himself with the details of this painfully interesting subject, we recommend a new book entitled "Dhow-Chasing in Zanzibar Waters," by Captain G. L. Sulivan, R.N., late commander of H.M.S. Daphne; the publishers are Messra. Sampson Low, Marston, Searle, and Co. It is the direct and plain-spoken testimony of a British sailor, not the appeal of a sentimentalist, but the record of practical experience, in re-buke of crimes as foul and bad as ever were perpetrated on the West African coast, now committed with impunity under the shelter of treaties to which British Governments have weakly assented. In the course of twenty years' naval service, from the cruise of the Castor in 1869, having also commanded the Pantaloon in 1866, the author had ample opportunities of seeing what goes on in this way. rantaion in 1800, the author had ample opportunities of seeing what goes on in this way; and he gives a vivid description of what he saw. Several of the Engravings with which his volume is illustrated, representing the "dhows" and other vessels of local navigation used by the Arab slave traders, were tent by Captain Sulivan to this Journal, in which they appeared some months ago.

which they appeared some months ago.

The sketches we now engrave, which are portraits of the Arab Governor of Lamoo, on the mainland territory of the Zanzibar Sultan; an Indian Banyan merchant at Lamoo, from Bembay; a negro boy and girl in slavery at Zanzibar; and the Hova Governor of Majunga, Zanzibar; and the Hova Governor of Majunga, on the north-west coast of Madagascar, with an official person of his staff, were drawn by Mr. Bartle Frere, son of the Special Envoy, when he lately visited each of those places. The town of Majunga, situated on the shore of Pembatooka Bay, was the only point in Madagascar where Sir Bartle Frere called, in the steam-yacht Enchantress, about six months ago. His mission was fairly received; indeed, there is more real difficulty, we suspect, with the Portuguese of Mozambique than with the natives of Madagascar in overcoming those corrupt and selfish interests which support the corrupt and selfish interests which support the iniquitous slave trade down that part of the East African archipelago. As for the Arab ruler of Zanzibar, he was rather obstinate at first; but he has since yielded to the energetic remonstrances of the yielded to the energetic remonstrances of the British Government. A new treaty was signed, on the 5th ult., by our Consul, Dr. Kirk, acting on behalf of her Majesty, and by a relative of the Sultan, as Plenipotentiary of his Highness. The treaty provides for the immediate cessation of the transport of slaves throughout his Majesty's dominions, for the abolition of all slave markets, and for the protection of all liberated slaves. The treaty was ratified the same day by the Sultan himself, who engages, motû proprio, to abide faithfully by its provisions and to do all in his power to see that they are effectually carried out within see that they are effectually carried out within his territories. The Arabic version of the treaty adopted by Dr. Kirk and his Highness was mainly that prepared by the Rev. Mr. Badger while at Zanzibar. Not a single additional gun-boat was on the station when the Sultan affixed his seal and signature to this important document, which abolishes for ever the transport of slaves from the mainland of Africa, and gives her Majesty's cruisers full power to seize and confiscate any vessel found engaged in the illegal traffic. The German Consul and the new Consul for the United States are said to have backed Dr. Kirk with all their influence; and it is gratifying to learn that her Majesty's representative was congratulated on the occasion not only by the resident Indian community, but by many of the principal Arabs. The Sultan, too, instead of exhibiting ill-will against us for our insistance in this matter of the slave trade, has notified his intention of visiting England next year. The success thus far achieved reflects credit on all who were engaged in the negotiations, but much still remains to be done.

ADVENTURE AT SEA.

Mr. J. R. Kirby, of Dover, Rear Commodore of the Royal Cinque Ports Yacht Club, and owner of the yacht Violet, met with an extraordinary adventure on Tuesday week, about nine o'clock in the morning, while running past Aldborough, in a trip from Lowestoft to Harwich. He made a sketch, which was given to us, and from which we have made an Engraving. The story is thus told in his letter:—"We were going along with a fresh north-west breeze and moderate sea. When we were off the Offord-ness lighthouses the sea was increasing, and we were observing a large brigantine near us, with all her canvas set. Then suddenly, and without the least warning or sign to us, the vessel made one plunge, and went down head fast. I could hardly believe my eyes at such a sudden disappearance, but I of course immediately bore down to the spot, and found that the crew, six in number, had just had time to jump into their boat and save themselves, with yacht, gave them a breakfast, and, with their boat and a dog. I took them on board my yacht, gave them a breakfast, and, with their boat in tow, stood in for Harwich, where I landed them about noon, retaining the cat and dog as souvenirs of such an extraordinary adventure, and these animals have already made themselves quite at home in their new ship. The captain told me that his vessel was the William, of Exeter, 200 tons burden. She ship. The captain told me that his vessel was the William, of Exeter, 200 tons burden. She was laden with coal, and had left Shields on the Saturday, but had fallen in with heavy weather, and sprung a leak. The men were nearly exhausted with pumping, when the vessel went down under them." We do not have whether or not this should be a case for Mr. Plimsoll.

With reference to the Obituary notice of Lord Marjoribanks, which appeared in our paper of the 28th ult., we find that the formalities con-nected with the letters patent for this peerage were completed on June 12 last, on which day the patent bears date. His Lordship died on June 19.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S COMPLETE
This work contains the fullest instructions for the Instrument, the Scales, a complete series of Exercises, a variety of new and modern Freludes, and a very large selection of the best and newest music, expressly arranged for this Work, and excluding all the old and backneyed airs so generally found in other tutors. The rudiments of nunic are simply and precisely treated, and nothing has been inserted but what is absolutely requisite for the pupil to learn at the commencement of his studies. The Tublishers confidently invite public attention to this Work, as at once the cheapest, the least, and most modern of all elementary works on the plannforte. Although the price is so low, the work consists of sixty pages of the full music size, and the whole is engraved and printed in the best possible style.—Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

SHAH OF PERSIA. VISIT OFTHE

The departure of his Majesty Nasr-ood-Deen, Shah of Persia, on Saturday last, after a sojourn of seventeen days in this country, brought to a close that brilliant series of public and private entertainments, which has afforded many subjects for the Illustrations in two recent Numbers of this Journal. The series is here completed by adding several others, which represent some incidents of his Majesty's two days' stay at Trentham, in Staffordshire, the seat of the Duke of Sutherland; the garden party at Chiswick, given immediately upon his return to London, on Saturday, the 28th ult., by their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, when her Majesty the Queen was one of the Royal guests; the special Crystal Palace fête in honour of the Shah, on Monday, the 30th, with his second and more private visit to the Crystal Palace, on the next Thursday; his inspection of Madame Tassaud's Exhibition of Waxwork Figures, on the Wednesday; his embarkation, last Saturday, on board the French Government steam-yacht Rapide, for conveyance across the Channel, with an escort of French ships of war; concluding with a sketch of the attitude of our Royal Asiatic visitor, as he stood on the deck of the steamer, apart from his courtiers and servants, to take a last lingering look at the shores of England, where he has been so handsomely treated. These incidents will be related with less minuteness than those of a more official and ceremonial character which were heretofore described.

Barlaston, on the road from Stone to Stoke-upon-Trent and Newcastle-under-Lyne, is one of the most superb mansions in rural England. It stands on the site Lyne, is one of the most superb mansions in rural England. It stands on the site of an old priory of Augustinian monks which was suppressed at the Reformation, when the place was bestowed on the Leveson family, one of whom, Sir Richard Leveson, K.C.B., about two hundred years ago, bequeathed his estates to a nephew, Sir William Gower, Baronet, founder of the Gower peerage, improved with an Earldom in 1746, the Marquisate of Stafford in 1786, and the Dukedom of Sutherland in 1833. The park has great advantages of wood and water, but is low and said to be rather damp; the gardens, which extend over sixty-five acres, are extremely beautiful. They comprise the terrace garden, the Italian garden, the parterre, the trellis walk, the nursery garden, and the so-called Rainbow Walk. The house is a fine Italian building, with a belvedere tower and campanile 100 ft. high; adjoining the hall is the old church, restored in this age, which serves as a private chapel. It was on the Thursday evening, the 26th ult, after his visit that day to Liverpool, that the Shah went to Trentham, where he arrived at eight o'clock. The Duke of Sutherland met his Royal guest on the platform of the Trentham railway station, and conducted him to the hall, where he was received by the Duchess, the Marquis of Stafford, Lord Albert and Lord Ronald Leveson-Gower. Among the other visitors staying there; was the Earl of Shrewsbury. The Italian garden was illuminated that evening with coloured lamps, which had a very pretty effect, the lines of the long balustrades and rows of urns with the forms of the arbours being distinctly shown in a variety of colours. A band played in the garden, while the Shah lounged on the terrace, or smoked his quiet pipe in the conservatory, reposing after the fatigues of his journey and the bustle of Liverpool. Next day he went to Crewe, as stated in our last, to see the London and North-Western Railway factory of locomotive engines; thence on to Manchester, for a sight of the cotton factories. He returned that Friday evening to Trentham, where he slept a second night. While there he rambled about the park, saw the deer, went in a beat on the lake, and joined the players in the bowling-alley, with a cigarette between his lips. Before leaving Trentham, which he did at eleven on the Saturday morning, his Majesty looked at the North Stalfordshire pack of foxhounds, brought into the courtyard for his inspection. Altogether, he enjoyed his stay at Trentham very much, or it would have been hard to please him anywhere in this country. Having got back to London at half-past three in the afternoon, his Majesty, about five o'clock, drove to Chiswick, where the Prince and Princess of Wales entertained him, and the Queen their mother, with other Royal and noble guests, and a numerous company besides, in the gardens of the Duke of Devonshire's villa. The Persians of his Majesty's suite were in attendance, as well as the Earl of Morley, Rear-Admiral Lord F. Kerr, Colonel the Hon. H. Byng, Major-General the Hon. A. Hardinge, and the members of the British mission who brought his Majesty from Belgium to England. Her Majesty the Queen, the Cesarewitch of Russia and the Cesarevina, Princess Beatrice, Prince Leopold, the Duke of Edinburgh, Prince Arthur, Prince and Princess Christian, Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne, the Duke and Duchess of Gambridge, the Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, and the Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strel Duke of Teek, Frince Christian, and Frince Waldemar of Denmark, Princess Mary of Cambridge, the Duchess of Cambridge, and the Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, with the Shah's half-brother and one or two other Persian Princes, sat in the lower seats of the front semicircle. half-brother and one or two other Persian Princes, sat in the lower seats of the front semicircle. The concert was over belore they arrived, but the Shah was probably more amused by a gymnastic exhibition of the German Turnverein, climbing ropes, turning on the horizontal bar, and wielding the big wooden club, which he and the Princes and Princesses handled for a moment to try its weight. The feats of the Japanese jugglers, and of a Mexican athlete, Senor Romah, on the high trapeze, were next performed for his diversion. The Royal puty, at eight o'clock, went into the balcony above the terrace, and saw the great fountains playing, but the effect of these was not so pleasant as it should have been, for their copious spray of rising waters encountered a down-pouring deluge of rain. The Shah and the Princes and Princesses dined in the Queen's corridor. Atten o'clock they saw what the wet weather permitted to be shown of a grand display of fireworks, ending with a final girandole of 1600 large rockets, let off by the Shah's own hand through the electric wire. They returned to London in their carriages, getting home between eleven and twelve.

The occupations of his Persian Majesty on Tuesday week were an unceremonious visit to the Bank of England, the Tower of London, and St. Paul's Cathedral; an afternoon rashionable party at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone; a look in at the House of Lords and the House of Commons, while they were sitting; and a walk through Westminister Abbey, with Dean Stanley. On Wednesday week the Shah again went to Windsor, for the third time, and paid a larewell visit to the Queen at the castle. He also called on Prince and Princes of Iristina at Frogmore. Having returned to town about seven o'clock, he went to see Madame Tussaud's Gallery of Waxwork Figures in Baker-street, where M. Victor Tussaud showed him every part of the exhibition. He was most struck with the effigy of the late Dispersor Napoleon II. and the igures of Queen Victoria with her family around her.

The Shah was so muc

ing with it to the crevices whence they had descended. He expressed much wonder at observing that when the cuttles reached the bottom they became the colour of the sand, and that on their ascent through the water they resumed the pinkish tint. He sat down in the aquarium, and, calling to him a child of a lady and gentleman among the visitors, fondled the child of a lady and gentleman among the visitors, fondled the child of a lady and gentleman among the visitors, fondled the child with much tenderness. He conversed with some Japanese ladies. On leaving the aquarium the Shah walked through the Byzantine, Rénaissance, and Gothic courts on the eastern side of the building. He was photographic views of the several courts and of the whole Crystal Palace. Turning into the nave again, his Majesty walked to the state box and thence into the balcony over the terrace. He saw the great fountains playing, and the people walking about the terraces and gardens. His Majesty instantly expressed a wish to walk unattended amongst them. Refusing the escort of any of his own servants, or of the police, or of the Crystal Palace officials, he boldly walked out into the balloon ground and saw the ascent of two balloons, with Mr. Ewens and Mr. Ewens, jun., in the cars. He went down to the water temples, and accepted a nosegay from the hands of a child, while constantly saluting the people with a smiling face. They heartily cheered him in return. Having re-entered the palace, he went into the refreshment-room to smoke, rested there half an hour, and then returned to town. In the evening he went to the International Exhibition, and bought some forty pictures, most of them landscapes by Belgian artists.

The Friday was spent much in quiet, but the Shah visited St. Thomas's Hespitel at three c'clock and in the evening went.

The Friday was spent much in quiet, but the Shah visited St. Thomas's Hospital at three o'clock, and in the evening went to the opera. He also called on the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Cesarewitch and Cesarevna, and went to Kensington, looking at the Hyde Park Albert Memorial on his way, to a garden party, which was given by the Duke and Duchess of Argyll. The Shah's departure, on Saturday, by the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway, to Portsmouth, and his embarkation for Cherbourg on board the French Government yacht Rapide, was the last act of these remarkable proceedings. His Majesty was accompanied to the Victoria station by their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, Prince Arthur, the Duke of Cambridge, and Prince Christian, all in uniform. The Duke of Edinburgh and Prince Arthur, who had met him on his arrival at Dover, went with him to Portsmouth. There was a luncheon on board the Rapide, while the Shah's luggage was being shipped; his attendants went on board the Hirondelle, a companion steamer. The Rapide was formerly called the Aigle, and was kept for the personal service of the late Emperor Napoleon III.; the Hirondelle was used by the Empress Eugénie at Biarritz and elsewhere. The two English Princes having taken leave of his Persian Majesty, and all being ready for departure, the French yachts started at two o'clock. They were joined at Spithead by four of the great ironelads of our Channel Squadron, which formed a powerful escort, the Northumberland and Agincourt on the port side, the Sultan and Hercules on the starboard. As the shores of Hampshire and the Isle of Wight receded from view in the distance, the Shah was observed standing alone upon the afterdeck, and looking back with an air of fixed meditation. The sea was calm and the air was clear; the yachts, with their guard of mighty British war-ships, went on towards France. About half-past five that afternoon, they were met in mid sea by the squadron of five French men of-war, under Admiral Reynaud, sent to escort the Shah to Cherbourg. This squadron consisted of the Ocean, flagship, the Suffren, the Reine Blanche, the Armide, and the Thetis, ironclads, with the despatch-boat Rénard in attendance. Both squadrons fired a sal sellaise" in mutual compliment of the two nations. The British ships then returned to Portsmouth, while the Shah went forward to Cherbourg, where he remained on Saturday night, sleeping on board the yacht. He landed on Sunday, visited the Arsenal, and travelled by railway to Paris, arriving there about six o'clock; but our Paris correspondent must tell how he was received in the French capital.

The Shah having been made a Knight of the Garter during his visit to England, her Majesty the Queen presented him with the badge and collar set in diamonds. He gave the Queen his photograph, set in diamonds, and the same to the Prince of

with the badge and collar set in diamonds. He gave the Queen his photograph, set in diamonds, and the same to the Prince of Wales. To the Duke of Cambridge, at the Windsor review, he gave a diamond-hilted sword; to Earl Granville he offered his jewelled portrait, but our Foreign Secretary, gracefully and skilfully as he does everything of the sort, plucked out the photograph from its costly setting, and would accept only his Majesty's likeness, without the precious stones around it. To Lord Morley, who had attended the Shah by the Queen's appointment, and to Colonel Henderson, Chief Commissioner of Metropolitan Police, he gave jewelled snuffboxes of gold; to Lady Rawlinson a tiara of diamonds, a bracelet to the Duchess of Sutherland, a sum of £2000 divided among the household servants at Buckingham Palace, and £3000 distributed among the police. So that X 24, whilst pacing on his beat in retrospective thought, will scarcely be disposed to say with Horace—Persicos odi, puer, apparatus!

The annual outdoor fête to the hapless inmates of Hanwell Asylum came off on Tuesday. Of the 1100 women and 700 men confined in the asylum 600 and 500 respectively were deemed capable of participating in the sports.

The Registrar-General for Scotland has issued his abstract and short report for the year 1872, and states that the births registered were 118,873, or 34.9 per 1000 of the population; the deaths 75,741, or 22.2 per 1000; the marriages 25,580, or 7.5 per 1000. The birth-rate and death-rate coincided with the preceding ten years' average; the marriage-rate was considerably above the average.

Mr. Chichester Fortescue paid a visit to Liverpool yesterday week, distributed the prizes on board the frigate Conway, and delivered a thoughtful address to the lads in training for the merchant service, had a conference with the Commercial Law Commit ce of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce in reference to the amendment of the Merchant Shipping Act, and in the evening dined with the Mayor and a large party.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The production, on Thursday week, of an Italian version of Auber's "Les Diamans de la Couronne" took place too late for our notice until now. This event adds another to the many fine works before comprised in the répertoire of this establishment, which includes similar adaptations of the same composer's "La Muetto de Portici" ("Masaniello"), "Fra Diavolo," and "Le Domino Noir;" and it also extends the already wide range of Madame Adelina Patti's charming performances, no one of which excels that now referred to. As to the opera itself, the music and the drama to which it is allied have been made so familiar by frequent representations of an English version that little need now be said thereon. Originally brought out in 1841, thirteen years later than "La Muette de Portici," and eleven years after "Fra Diavolo," it followed "Le Domino Noir" at an interval of four years.

"Les Diamans" belongs to its composer's ripest period,

"Les Diamans" belongs to its composer's ripest period, and contains some of his most exquisite music moulded with his most finished art, transcending in some respects, especially in the concerted pieces, many of his other works of the opéra-in the concerted pieces, many of his other works of the operacomique class.

Of course, amidst all the surroundings, the performance of Madame Patti as Caterina—the young Queen of Portugal, who is first seen in her retreat as the supposed niece of the chief of a band of coiners—was a primary feature in the representation now referred to. The splendid voice of the singer, her perfect command of all the phases of her art, both in the brilliant and the expressive styles, and the inimitable charm of her acting, were never more worthily or more successfully displayed than on this occasion. From among many instances may be specified her admirable singing in the aria (with chorus) "Son la temuta," the ballata, "Un dinella foresta," and the duet (with Enrico) "Piu dolce momento"—all in the first act—the beautiful "Bolero" duet (with, Diana); the air, with bravura variations, in the second act; and the rondo (from Auber's early opera "Leicester,") introduced in the last finale. Other interpolations were made—an air for Diana, and a duet for that character and Sebastiano, in the second act (both taken from Auber's "La Neige"); a short duet for Sebastiano and Caterina in the same act; and an aria for the former at the beginning of the third act, both composed by Signor Vianesi, by whom also the recitatives were written, to the Italian text supplied by Signor Zaffira.

Madame Monbelli, as Diana, sang with great effect, particularly in the duet and the introduced aria already referred to. Signor Bettini, as Enrico, sang carefully; as did Signor Cotogn, as Sebastiano, a part that belongs properly to a tenor. Signor Ciampi missed the humour of the character of Rebolledo—such as we have seen given to it at the Paris Opéra Comique—and Signor Tagliafico was scarcely better suited with the part of Campo-Mayor.

The musical substitutions and additions somewhat interfere with the unity of style of a work which, as its composer left it, is perfect of its kind. The superb performance of Madame comique class.

with the unity of style of a work which, as its composer left it, is perfect of its kind. The superb performance of Madame Patti, however, would alone suffice to secure the success of the Italian version of "Les Diamans de la Couronne," which was given again on Saturday, and was announced for a third time yesterday (Friday).

This week's performances commenced with "Il Trovatore," for the last time; and on Tuesday "Le Nozze di Figaro" was given for the first time this season, with three novelties in the cast—Mdlle. Albani as the Countess, Madame Monbelli as Susanna, and Mdlle. Smeroschi as Cherubino. The two first performances were the most successful of the three. Mdlle. Susanna, and Mdlle. Smeroschi as Cherubino. The two first performances were the most successful of the three. Mdlle. Albani was graceful and lady-like throughout, and was much applauded for her singing of "Porgi amor," and still more so (and justly) for her delivery of "Dove sono," Madame Monbelli having also particularly distinguished herself in the aria, "Deh vieni," the duet for the two, "Sull' aria," having been one of the encores of the evening. Other repetitions were those of the duet for the Count and Susanna, "Crudel perche," Cherubino's canzone, "Voi che sapete," and the overture. Mdlle. Smeroschi's page was not one of her most successful performances. M. Faure was, as heretofore, one of the best Figaros that have ever appeared in Mozart's comic masterpiece; and M. Maurel, as the Count, sang well and acted effectively, the cast having been completed by Madame Anese as Marcellina, and Signori Bettmi, Ciampi, and Tagliafico respectively as Basilio, Bartolo, and Antonio.

For Thursday "Faust" was announced; for Friday (as already said), "Les Diamans de la Couronne;" and for tonight (Saturday), a repetition of "Le Nozze di Figaro."

"Der Freischitz" is promised for next Tuesday, and "L'Etoile du Nord" for the following Friday, both for the first time this year, the week after next being the last of the season.

The fifth and last of the Floral Hall Concerts took place on The fifth and last of the Floral Hall Concerts took place on Saturday afternoon, and the occasion again included the fine singing of Madame Adelina Patti, Mdhe. Albani, and other eminent members of the Royal Italian Opera company. The celebrated Hungarian Gipsy Band appeared for the first time in public, and played a national waltz with great success. Sir J. Benedigt and Signeri Vianci and Pariers is conducted. Benedict and Signori Vianesi and Bevignani conducted.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

The special performance given here yesterday (Friday) week in honour of the Shah of Persia calls for no detailed notice, having consisted of portions of operas cast as recently noticed by us—the first act of "La Traviata," the second act of "La Favorita," and the first act of "Mignon"—Madame Nilsson having been the representative of the heroines in the first and last named extracts, and Mdlle. Titiens in the central selection selection.

This week's performances commenced with a repetition of "Faust;" on Tuesday "Mignon" was given for the last time this season; for Thursday the last performance of "La Favorita" was announced; and for to-night (Saturday) "Le Nozze di Figaro," for the first time this season, which is to close at the end of next week, the production of Balfe's posthumous opera, "H Talismano," being postponed to next year.

The fourth opera concert at the Royal Albert Hall, on Saturday, again comprised performances by Mesdames Nilsson and Trebelli-Bettini, Signori Campanini and Agnesi, and other prin-cipal vocalists of Her Majesty's Opera; the fine orchestra of which establishment likewise contributed to the selection. Mr. Cusins conducted.

NATIONAL MUSIC MEETINGS.

The first of this year's series of these competitive meetings at the Crystal Palace commenced on Thursday week, when class 8 (solo sopranos), class 10 (solo tenors), and a special class of juvenile wind bands competed publicly for the prizes assigned in each instance. Nine ladies had been selected from twenty-one applicants and four from seventeen gentlemen aspirants. one applicants and four from seventeen gentiemen aspirants. The prize (a purse of £30) in each of these classes was awarded—in the one case, to Miss Jessie Jones; in the other, to Mr. Frank Gifford; certificates of merit having been conferred on Miss E. Tomsett and Mr. W. H. Wadmore.

Four juvenile brass bands competed—The Boys' Home, Regent's Park-road; the English and Continental College, Harrow of the bands just named, smaller prizes having been awarded to each of the others.

Marylebone Schools, Southall; and St. Mary's Orphanage, Hounslow. The principal prize (£25) was gained by the third of the bands just named, smaller prizes having been awarded to each of the others.

At the second competition, on Saturday, six contralto solo singers (class 9) and six tenor solo-singers (class 11) competed. The prize (in each case £30) was awarded in class 9 to Miss Bolingbroke, and in class 11 to Mr. E. Thorndike.

Another competition on Saturday was that between the brass bands of the Carrow Works, Norwich, the Royal Artillery band, Woolwich, and the 3rd Gloucester Volunteer Artillery band. Here the first prize (£50) was given to the second of the bands named, another prize (a military instrument value £22) having been awarded to the Carrow Works band.

The third day's contests (on Tuesday) began with class 2 (choral societies). The first prize (£100) was gained by the Stepney Tonic Sol-Fa Association; the second (a set of Messrs. Boosey and Co.'s "Royal Edition of Operas," given by them to the South London Choral Association. The judges were Sir J. Benedict and Messrs. H. Leslie and J. Barnby.

In class 12 (trumpet solo players) only two competitors appeared—Mr. W. Morrow and Mr. W. Wilmore, the latter of whom obtained the first prize (£25), and the former the second prize (a trumpet, value £15 15s., given by Messrs. Besson). Here the umpires were Sir J. Benedict, Signor Arditi, and Mr. Cusins.

In class 4 (church choirs) there was no competition, and the first prize (£30) was awarded to the choir of St. Nicholas Church, Liverpool. In this case the judges were Sir J. Goss, Sir G.

Elvey, and Mr. J. L. Hatton.
Of the closing day's contests, on Thursday (including the performances of the South Wales choristers and those of the Tonic Sol-Fa Association) we must speak next week.

The eighth and last concert of the sixty-first season of the Philharmonic Society, on Monday, commenced with a symphony by Emmanuel Bach, the second son of the great Sebastian. The work, like its composer's pianoforte music, has a special interest as marking the transition from the severe school to the freer and more modern style of Haydn. The other symphony was Beethoven's No. 7 (in A), and the overtures were that to the manuscript oratorio "St. John the Baptist," by Mr. C. A. Macfarren (performed at a concert of the British Orchestral Society in January last), and that composed by Weber in celebration of the fiftieth year of the reign of the King of Saxony in 1818. Madame Carreno-Sauret played Mendelssohn's capriccio in B minor, and M. Colyns, the Belgian violinist, executed the first movement of Rode's eighth concerto with much neatness of mechanism. Mdlle. Titiens concerto with much neatness of mechanism. Mdlle. Titiens was the vocalist, and Mr. Cusins conducted, as usual.

Mr. Gustav Erlanger, pianist, gave an evening concert at St. George's Hall on Saturday, when he brought forward various pieces, vocal and instrumental, of his own composition, all of which were well received.

The eminent vocalist, Miss Edith Wynne, gave her concert (in the same locality) on Wednesday evening, when her scheme included a performance of Signor Randegger's operetta, "The Rival Beauties. On Wednesday also Mr. Frederic Archer (organist to the Alexandra Palace Company) gave his concert, at the Hanoversquare Rooms.

The annual concert of Mr. Brinley Richards, the pianist

The annual concert of Mr. Brinley Richards, the pianist and composer, is announced for this (Saturday) evening.

We have already given an outline of the programme for the approaching Birmingham Musical Festival, the scheme of which has just been more definitely announced. On the opening day, Aug. 26, "Elijah" will be performed. At the evening concert Signor Schira's new cantata, entitled "The Lord of Burleigh," will be played for the first time, and a miscellaneous selection will include "Inno Della Pace," Rossini. The performances on the succeeding days will be as follow:—Wednesday morning, a new oratorio, "The Light of the World," composed expressly for this festival by Arthur S. Sullivan. Wednesday evening, a miscellaneous selection, comprising Beethoven's symphony in C minor. Thursday morning, "The Messiah." Thursday evening, a new cantata, by Signor Randegger, entitled "Fridolin" (first time of performance); and a miscellaneous selection, including "Song of Titans" (Rossini), overture to "William Tell," &c. Friday morning, sacred cantata, "God, Thou art Great" (Spohr), Imperial Mass (Haydn), "Ave Maria" (first time of performance), Rossini; double chorus, "Cantemus" (first time of performance), Rossini; and selections from "Israel in Egypt." Friday evening, "Judas Maccabeus." The principal vocalists will be Mdlle. Titiens, Madame LemmensSherrington, Mdlle, Albani, Madame Patey, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Vernon Rigby, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Santley, and Signor Foli. Organist, Mr. Stimpson; conductor, Sir Michael Costa. The band and chorus will be on the same large scale as usual at these great music meetings.

GLOBE.

On Friday week Mr. H. J. Montague brought his season to a close, and, as usual, addressed his audience on the occasion, stating that he and his company would retire awhile from the scene, and that during their "absence Mr. Edward Saker, the popular lessee and equally popular actor of the Alexandra Theatre, Liverpool, would make his first appearance before a London audience." This the gentleman in question did on Saturday last, in a piece entitled "Coming Home"—a new domestic drama by Mr. George Ralph Walker, founded on a Christmas story by the same author, who, it is evident, is an imitator of the late Charles Dickens. The new play bears the title of "Sithors to Grind," and has been played under that name successfully in the provinces. There has, of course, been a reason for that success, albeit the taste of the country and that of the town may differ, and that might prosper at the Alexandra which would fail at the Globe. At any rate, at the latter it would be subject to more searching criticism, and a higher quality of drama would be required. The work, such as it is, is more of tales tasts which journalism has not been as it is, is more of the nature of a story than of a drama, and exhibits evidences of false taste which journalism has not been slow in exposing. Instead of sterling dialogue, pantomimic action is substituted; and the style too frequently runs into bathos where pathos had evidently been in the writer's intention. These objections are no doubt valid. On the other tion. These objections are no doubt valid. On the other hand, we have to record that the performance receives much applause, and is well calculated to please a miscellaneous audience. It is rather difficult to give a sketch of the plot, which tells itself much better in action than in description. Two brothers—Tom and Joe Stammers—part early in life; the former gets on in the world and marries a haughty woman, Eglantine Stammers (Mrs. J. B. Howard), and, being supposed dead, leaves her £20,000. Joe is not so fortunate: he is reduced to the precessity of so issors grinding for a subsistence. to the necessity of scissors-grinding for a subsistence. Tom had a daughter before marrying with Eglantine, and this daughter and the widow become rivals for the hand of Lord Templemore (Mr. J. H. Barnes). In his capacity of scissor-grinding, Joe and Eleanor Stammers become acquainted, and ultimately discover their mutual relationship. Eleanor finds a retreat in his cottage when driven out of doors by the haughty dame. Ultimately the latter is reduced to poverty, and the more humble persons of the story are raised to affluence. Added to these characters is one of a sentimental blacksmith, Ted Bluff (Mr. F. B. Warde), and a benevolent lawyer, Mr. Hackute (Mr. Fred Thorne). Of the manner in which these elements are made to work together, knowledge must be obtained by actual attendance at the theatre. Of the way in which the new drama may be received in the long run, and whether a long run may be predicated of it, it would be unwise at present to hazard a remark.

After a well-earned rest, Mr. Irving reappeared on Monday evening in "Charles I." From the opening scene with the children to the last word, "Remember!" the actor was at his best, and was well supported by Miss Bateman, as the Queen. This lady's admirable pronunciation of the French phrases lends a special truth to the representation. Mr. W. H. Stephens now represents the Marquis of Huntley. It need hardly be said that the part loses nothing in his hands. Mr. R. Markby, as Ireton, contributes his share to the success of the scene of the interview between the King and Cromwell. Miss G. Pauncefort, as Lady Eleanor, and Mr. Belmore, as Cromwell, continue to sustain their parts with the power of well-practised artistes.

FRENCH PLAYS.

Again we have to record progress at the St. James's and Princess's Theatres. At the former the Brussels company has been reinforced by the arrival of Mdlle. Fonti, who during the week has appeared in Offenbach's merry opéra-bouffe called "The Brigands," with which the English public are already familiar. "La Belle Hélène" and "Braconniers" are announced. We trust that the "Cent Vierges" is withdrawn. Madame Judic made her first appearance at the Princess's on Monday.

THE MAGAZINES FOR JULY.

The Cornhill is varied and versatile this month, and the present instalment of its principal fiction, "Zelda's Fortune," is the most brilliant we have had. We must caution the public, however, against supposing for a single moment that the criticisms of the daily press, more especially the art-criticisms, are concocted in the manner so piquantly described by Mr. Francillon. "Young Brown," a new fiction, opens with much cleverness, full of spirit and hard photographic truth. But the personages thus far are unpleasing, the comfortable ones repulsive, the interesting ones uncomfortable. The range of character is wide: from a profligate Duke to a compassionate ostler; the writer's observation is everywhere keen, but is especially evinced in his sketches of persons and things appertaining to the equine world. A paper on the history of the Civil Service Association chronicles its marvellous progress, claims the credit of its establishment for the Post Office, and hints that that energetic department regrets not having kept the management entirely in its own hands. "A Whewellite" argues against the adaptation of the planet Mars to sustain animal The Cornhill is varied and versatile this month, and the present of its establishment for the Post Oince, and hints that that energetic department regrets not having kept the management entirely in its own hands. "A Whewellite" argues against the adaptation of the planet Mars to sustain animal life. The atmosphere is, he thinks, excessively rare; the cold intense, the middle zones powdered over with hoar frost; the Arctic liable to tremendous catastrophes from the breaking up of masses of ice. We can scarcely understand how these latter phenomena could occur without the agency of heat. The panegyrist of the Brontë family hardly makes enough of his case. It is but a tepid admiration which deems it needful to insinuate an apology for "Wuthering Heights," and the mutilation of Emily Brontë's sublime death-song is the sheerest barbarism. The misprint here perpetrated of paths for froth is among the most detestable we remember. The personages most intimately connected with Bath, mentioned in the present instalment of the "Literary Recollections" of the city, are Beckford and Landor. Neither seems to have enjoyed more than a prophet's honour in "his own country." Beckford is remembered as "a vain, selfish, egotistical, rather priggish sort of person." The mention of Landor's name commonly clicits the remark, "Oh, he did so-and-so, and he had to leave the place." "A Princess of Thule," in Macmillan, describes the intro-

The picture, one of Mr. Black's best, is full of sweetness and delicate pathos, darkened by forebodings of impending trouble.

Mr. Burnand's fiction is more lively and interesting than heretofore. The most important of the miscellaneous papers is a spirited sketch of Daniel O'Connell from the pen of one of the only competent judges of this remarkable man, his countrymen. Admitting his hero's derelictions from the English standard of decency and fair-dealing in politics, and lamenting that his example contributed so little to elevate the low standard of political morality in his own country, the writer nevertheless finds abundant material for eulogium in the real magnitude of his services, and especially in the great lesson he taught Irishmen of the sufficiency of peaceable agitation for the redress of grievances. The other contributions are unimportant.

With the exception of two pleasant papers on touring in grievances. The other contributions are unimportant.

With the exception of two pleasant papers on touring in Ireland and in Cashmere, and the continuation of "the Wykehamist's" sensible but discouraging remarks on the ways and means of improving the condition of the peasantry in the south of England, Fraser is chiefly devoted to theological and philosophical speculation. The carnestness of Miss Nightingale's "Sub Notes" commands respectful sympathy, blended with "egret at the obscurity occasioned by the imperfection of the literary form. The general drift of Miss Nightingale's observations seems to be complaint of the prevalence of mere criticism in excess of practical work. Mr. Fitzjames Stephens' recent book is reviewed by a critic who Fitzjames Stephens' recent book is reviewed by a critic who alternately assents and differs in a cautious, half-hearted way, and appears to have no grasp of the subject. Mr. F. W. Newman versus Mr. Matthew Arnold is the old contest of earnest, ingenuous, somewhat narrow, and slightly uncouth religious feeling against the refinements of a dainty and not too retigious feeling against the remements of a dainty and not too masculine culture. In this case, however, culture has committed itself to sundry paradoxes, which feeling, aided by scholarship, has no difficulty in exposing, and might have exposed more effectively still. Professor Max Müller's lectures in controversion of Mr. Darwin's philosophy of language conclude rather oddly with the statement that some will hold him to have proved his opponent's case, and that he lacks time to show them that they are mistaken.

General Cluseret's account of the military organisation of show them that they are mistaken.

General Cluseret's account of the military organisation of the Commune, in the Fortnightly Review, may be full of truth—it is certainly full of vanity. Mr. H. Crompton's plea for a reform of the laws regulating the relations of masters and workmen would have gained greatly in weight by the adoption of a more temperate tone. The ablest article in the number is that on "The Abortiveness of French Revolutions," by Mr. J. C. Morison. Mr. Morison takes the gloomiest view of French political incapacity, and sums up the situation thus:—"The anarchy is such that it infallibly leads to despotism, and the despotism fatally becomes such as inevitably to lead to a new outburst of anarchy." We think he hardly accords due weight to the fact of a Government having recently existed for nearly two years, which, on the whole, treated all parties with substantial fairness. The loss of this unprecedented example in French politics is the greatest misfortune attendant on the overthrow of M. Thiers. The Servian author of a valuable overthrow of M. Thiers. The Servian author of a valuable essay on the rise and decline of Panslavism attributes the latter phenomenon to the discovery on the part of the Czechs and Southern Slavonians that "Panslavism" is practically equivalent to absorption into Russia. There are also interesting papers on Girton College and on the speculations of De Maillet, a French writer, whose fancies are sometimes, though erroneously, held to have anticipated Lamarck's theory of development.

"The Payrians" in Phylanacia anticipated.

a French writer, whose fancies are sometimes, though erroneously, held to have anticipated Lamarck's theory of development.

"The Parisians," in Blackwood, continues to improve, and is, in these latter chapters especially, a typical representation of the mature yet shallow wisdom of a philosophic man of the world, the character in which Lord Lytton was, after all, most perfectly at home. Very French, too, is the exceedingly able paper on marriage in France, written with an evident leaning towards that cold and worldly institution. The paper undoubtedly establishes the existence of much actual comfort in French domestic life; but one rises from its perusal with a feeling that "a fine dissatisfaction" would be preferable to content procured by such business-like arrangements. "The Four Ages," treating principally of old age, is an essay full of genial wisdom.

The most important contribution to a good number of the Contemporary is Miss Simeox's essay on the influence of Mr. Stuart Mill's writings, which the authoress seems to consider to have principally consisted in the fairness of his temper and the reasonableness of his method. "More weight has been given," by her, "to a possible development or application of his teaching than to its substance." The number also contains excellent papers on the poetry of Victor Hugo, and on the condition of our hemisphere during the formation of the chief geological systems; together with an argument by Mr. Arthur Arnold in favour of the State purchase of railways, and one by the Hon. Dudley Campbell advocating a simpler but much more important innovation—the joint education of the sexes. Numerous instances are given of the admirable working of this salutary reform on the Continent and in the United States.

The Month has some characteristic papers. That on "The Bismarckian Persecution" illustrates the real or affected inability of Roman Catholies to understand two very obvious propositions—that the promulgation of the Infallibility decrees has altered the relation of their Chu has aftered the relation of their Church towards the civil power, and that he who tolerates nobody has no right to expect anybody to tolerate him. Another article describes the present condition of Louise Lateau, a Belgian girl who has been supernaturally rewarded for her sanctity by being pierced through the hands, branded on the forehead, cast into cataleptic fits, and otherwise subjected to agonising tortures, detailed with revolting minuteness. We have rarely seen such an instance of fatness, grovelling superstition.

The Victoria has so interesting a reminiscence of Mr. Mill as to cause us to marvel, with Pope, "how the devil it got there." The last line explained the mystery; it is borrowed from a New York parieties.

from a New York periodical.

The most important articles selected this month by the Transatlantic are Mr. C. F. Adams's funeral oration on Mr. Seward, and an account of the auriferous "black sands" of California.

"Clytie," in the Gentleman's Magazine, is full of sparkle; and Mr. Baker Hopkins's fiction promises to turn out a good example of the same school. A fanciful tale, entitled "A Strange Experiment," is introduced as by the (ex) Khivan correspondent of the Telegraph. If this be put forth as a passport to public favour, it is a strange experiment indeed. The Monthly Packet has one paper of much beauty, entitled "Twilight." The best contribution to Temple Bar is a poem in eighteenth-century style called "Horace in his Toga." We must be content with a mere acknowledgment of Tinsley, Belgravia, London Society, with its "holiday number," the New Monthly, the St. James's Magazine, Good Words, the Argosy, and Cassell's Magazine.

SIR HENRY RAWLINSON, K.C.B., F.R.S.

This distinguished political and military servant of the British Asiatic Empire, having resided six years in Persia—from 1833 to 1839, when he assisted the father of the present Shah to organise his army for the defence of that kingdom against foreign aggression—was properly chosen by our Queen to meet the Shah at Brussels with her invitation to England, and to be the chief of his English attendants while his Majesty sojourned amongst us. Major-General Sir Henry Creswick Rawlinson, K.C.B., is a son of A. T. Rawlinson, Esq., of Chadlington, Oxfordshire, but of an old Lancashire family; one of his brothers is the Rev. Canon Rawlinson, Professor of Ancient History at the University of Oxford and author of "The Five Great Monarchies." Sir Henry was born in 1813, was educated at Ealing School, served in the Bombay army, was Resident in Persia, as remarked above, then Political Agent at Kandahar, and helped to keep that position safe during the Afghan War. In 1843 he became the British Political Agent in Turkish Arabia; he was afterwards British Consul at Bagdad, and Consul-General in Asiatic Turkey. Having come home, he was elected a Director of the East India Company, in 1856, when the honour of knighthood was also conferred upon him. On the transfer of the Indian Government from the Company to the Queen's Administration, in 1858, he was appointed one of the Convail to advise the Secretary of State for India. In the same organise his army for the defence of that kingdom against foreign Queen's Administration, in 1858, he was appointed one of the Council to advise the Secretary of State for India. In the same year he was elected M.P. for Reigate. In April, 1859, he was sent as Special Envoy to the Court of Teheran, having resigned his seat in the House of Commons. At the general election of 1865 he was chosen M.P. for Frome, but withdrew from Parliament in 1869, and research his to the Court of Teheran. liament in 1868, and resumed his seat in the Council for India. He has contributed much to the discussions of the Asiatic and Geographical Societies, especially with reference to the interpretation of Babylonian, Assyrian, and Persian cuneiform inscriptions. Royal Geographical Society elected him President on the death of Sir Roderick Murchison. # BY THE WAY.

Dr. Johnson had a good deal to say in favour of "private war," as he called duelling, and held that a man had as much right to defend his character as his property by force of arms. It would have been interesting to hear him on the fight which, thanks to the telegram system rather than to the intrinsic interest of the case, has been made a European affair—the rencontre between MM. de Cassagnac and Ranc. Possibly the sturdy old Englishman would have scoffed at the idea of a Frenchman's character being worth fighting about. In spite of the Doctor, we islanders have completely got rid of the habit of "sending messages." The law and the expressed determination of several of the Judges to hang the survivor in a fatal duel and his seconds had a good deal to do with the abandonment of the practice; and the fact that it had come to be resorted to by members of classes whose usual feelings on the "bject of honour are not supposed to be very delicate had a good deal more. If we remember aright, the last "meeting" was between a linendraper's assistant and a gentleman of the hair-dressing persuasion, and the former was "winged." Dramatists, who cling to conventions, still make their heroes challenge one another; but the audiences laugh, and this is well, as we go to a theatre to be amused. But France, according to her own statement, the country of logic and justice, encourages and admires conflicts by which both are set at nought, and in which the wrongdoer will be the victor if he has sedulously attended the fencing-room or the shooting-gallery. In the affair of the De Cassagnac and Ranc duel the interest of those who attended to the subject was, perhaps, less barbarous than is usually the case; for, while both combatants were skilled gladiators, we are not aware that Europe would have gone into mourning had the matter ended in Eteocles and Polynices fashion. However, both gentlemen have been spared to remain ornaments of civilised society. The report of the seconds varies from that of the telegram, and states that M. de

We refer lovers of "Uncle Toby"—and that is equivalent to giving the advice to everybody capable of enjoying literary pleasure—to a short but very interesting paper in the new number of Macmillan. The writer asserts, on grounds which appear to be sound, that the character of Uncle Toby was drawn by Sterne from Captain Hinde, a neighbour of Lord Dacre, whom the great author used to visit at his country seat. Without spoiling a reader's enjoyment of the paper, we would mention that Captain Hinde, a retired officer, made an embattled front to his house, called in his labourers from the fields by the sound of a bugle, and had a battery at the end of his garden. His love for all living things was extraordinary; and, though the firing his guns was one of his chief delights, he one day discovered that a bullfinch had built her nest in the garden hedge close to his battery. Thereon he commanded that no more salutes should be fired until the little birds had flown. Such a piece of evidence is in itself strong enough to identify the portrait of "everybody's uncle."

The end of the case for the prosecution in re Tichborne will probably have come before these lines are read. Recent proceedings have been important, but they have not been exciting. The defendant's counsel justifiably asks for an adjournment, that he may consider the whole of the testimony that has been adduced, and the shape of his reply, and urges that his obtaining this grace will be the means of saving time. A certain period will, of course, be allowed him. The defendant is unwell. That people continue to discuss the case is clear, for Mr. Commissioner Kerr, on Tuesday, indignantly rose and took his court away withhim to amore removed ground, observing that he would leave the place to counsel and others who wished to debate the Tichborne affair. But general interest will hardly revive until it is seen what cue Dr. Kenealy takes. We need scarcely say that Mr. Whalley has been again heard in the House of Commons with a question or two, or that the Government has totally declined to enter upon the topic. We might almost venture to submit to him that he has really done enough at present for his friend in making the splendid and amazing suggestion, which, at all risk of "contempt," he published last week, the plan of getting rid of the evidence of all the Catholic witnesses, by regarding it as given by direction of spiritual advisers. The Times has, however, a good deal depreciated the value of this idea, by pointing out that but a portion of those who have declared the defendant not to be Tichborne are of the faith so hateful to the member for Peterborough.

We are informed by one of the correspondents from Paris that the Shah has been so much delighted with England that he meditates another visit at no distant time. We shall, doubtless, be able to consider this fact with more serenity by-and-by than at present, when it is not inhospitable to say that we are a little like the giver of a festival who hears the last departing wheels "crunching the gravel." His Majesty is said to have lost no opportunity of proclaiming his delight with England, her Queen, and her people. He admires her Majesty more than any Sovereign whom he has seen, and he is enchanted with the eager welcome he received from the masses. He is reported to have used a word, in mentioning the latter, which has more significance in the East, where family feelings are cherished, than in some parts of Europe. "Are these persons all my cousins, that they are so happy to see me?" When Nassr-ed-din shall have paid us a few more visits he will, perhaps, discover that, except in Scotland, cousinhood does not necessarily imply the most enthusiastic affection of which human nature is capable. He knows already that gratia fratrum rara est, and that even a brother-in-law is occasionally an inconvenience of which a resolute relative gets quit by summary process. As we expected, we are told that the Shah declared that in France he had seen the sun for the first time. We decline to believe this: it is a Gallic fiction. We prefer to think of him, in Gay's words, as and a bigot is a person who is obstinately and unreasonably wedded to a particular opinion. If the Shah did not see the sun on a great many days when her Majesty's subjects were scorching and sweltering, he must have had in his train a counsellor of the true Oriental type. "If the King at noon day declares it is night, swear that you see the stars."

Mr. Macready's library has been sold. The catalogue was not a very large one, and perhaps the most important items in it consisted of volumes presented by their authors to the great tragedian. Talfourd gave "Ion," Knowles "Virginius," and other dramatists whose works had been fortunate enough to be produced by Mr. Macready paid him similar courtesy. His friend Mr. Dickens, of course, did not forget him when a new novel was complete, and these presentation copies brought high prices, "Nicholas Nickleby," for instance, fetching £16. Such sales are, of course, matter of business; but there is something unsatisfactory in the idea that a scholar occupies himself, up to nearly the last day of his life, in enriching his library, and that in a couple of months later the accumulations of fifty years are scattered by the auctioneer. We are glad to know that in the case of the last-mentioned author no such dispersion had to take place, and that all his well-chosen books passed by bequest to one who values them both as a gift and for their own sakes; but this is exceptional. A library is the reflection of its owner's mind, and some day, when we are taking thought for a memorial to an illustrious man, it may be worth considering whether the conservation of his book-collection—his portraiture of himself—would not be a philosophical as well as a graceful way of showing him honour.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

The "Royal Edition of Songs of England," just published by Messrs. Boosey and Co., forms a worthy companion volume to their preceding collections, "The Songs of Scotland" and "The Songs of Wales." The work now referred to contains a choice selection of English melodies, ranging from the sixteenth century down to recent years, and including favourite pieces by Purcell, Boyce, Dibdin, Shield, Arne, Linley, Storace, Bishop, Balfe, and other popular composers, besides traditional and anonymous tunes. Where possible, the names of the authors of the words, as well as of the composers of the music, are given; and the whole has been carefully edited by Mr. J. L. Hatton, who has skilfully adapted new symphonies and accompaniments to many of the old songs. The volume is well printed, and altogether handsomely got up, and in these respects, as well as in cheapness, it resembles the valuable series of the "Royal Edition of Operas," issued by the same publishers.

"Belshazzar" and "Theodora" are names of oratorios that are but little known to the modern English public, but that bid fair to become more so through the excellent and cheap editions recently issued by Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co. Both these fine works had rested long in oblivion, with the exception of occasional slight extracts from each, until their performance under the direction of Mr. Barnby—"Belshazzar" in May, and "Theodora" in June last, as noticed by us at the time. The composition of the oratorio first named belongs to the year 1744, that of the other dating five years later. It is from "Theodora" that the well-known air, "Angels ever bright and fair," is taken. This and the other work contain both solo pieces and choruses that render them quite as important as many other of Handel's oratorios that have been treated with less neglect. The editions now referred to are edited by Mr. G. A. Macfarren, and future repetition performances should help to rescue such grand music from its past comparative oblivion.

In a far lighter strain than the publications last noticed are "The Persian Love-Song," with English words cleverly adapted from the original by Mr. Sutherland Edwards, and the "Royal March," composed by Signor Vianesi for performance on the occasion of the recent state visit of the Shah of Persia to the Royal Italian Opera. The piece first mentioned (published by E. C. Boosey, of Little Argyle-street) was noticed by us when speaking of its recent performance at the Crystal Palace. Signor Vianesi's march is published (arranged for the pianoforte) by Messrs. Enoch and Sons, of Berners-street. It commences in true martial style, and introduces, by way of episode, a characteristic national air, which is followed by an effective coda.

Messrs. J. B. Cramer and Co. have recently issued various novelties, both instrumental and vocal. Among the former are two by E. Paladhile, the composer of the popular "Mandolinata." His "Barcarolle" is an effective pianoforte piece, in which a pervading melody is surrounded with brilliant passages calculated to display both the instrument and the performer's powers. Somewhat similar in treatment, although not in subject, is his "Chant des Feuilles," a graceful idyll. From Messrs. Cramer we have also an acceptable valse sentimentale, entitled "Geraldine," by Mr. T. Mudie, whose name appears far too seldom in print. Although the piece referred to is a bagatelle, it is written with that neatness of touch which shows the skilled and cultivated musician.

From the house of Mr. E. C. Boosey we have two agreeable vocal pieces by the esteemed tenor singer Mr. W. H. Cummings. His song, "She like a seraph sings," and his trio, "A land where beauty cannot fade," are both characterised by suavity of melody and rhythmical flow, and will be found very effective in performance. The trio is for soprano, contralto, and tenor. The same publisher has issued an expressive song entitled "Nothing," by Henriette, and a piece of similar kind, "There is a garden in her face," by E. N. Grazia, whose style (as well as name) is Italian in this instance; while there is much more of the English character in his ballad, "Only a Dream."

"What Care I?" (published by Mesrs. Brewer and Co.) is a song of a bold and marked character. The words (by Rosalind) are well and pungently written, in inculcation of a philosophic self-contentment; and the melody is well suited thereto. The accompaniment would have borne a little revision in occasional passages for the left hand; but this a mere trifle, and does not affect the general merit of the song. Karl Schiller is the name associated with the music.

"Still the Angel Stars are Shining"—words by Adelaide A. Proctor—has been set to a very agreeable and vocal melody by Oliver Cramer, whose song should find favour among those who cultivate the sentimental style.

It will be sufficient merely to record the publication, by Messrs. Duff and Stewart, of Mr. George Carter's Cantata "Evangeline" (founded on Longfellow's poem)—having previously spoken of its favourable reception and repetition in performance at the Royal Albert Hall.

The Board of Trade returns for June are unfavourable, showing a considerable falling off both in quantities and values in all our principal exports. The total value was £19,470,083, against £20,223,621 last year.

At Waterford there was no opposition to the return of the Hon. Henry Villiers Stuart, in the room of Mr. de la Poer, who has resigned; and the hon. gentleman was duly elected yesterday week.

Mr. Maurice Brooks, a merchant and magistrate of Dublin, was, on Monday, nominated Lord Mayor for 1874. He was the Liberal candidate, the Conservative candidate (Dr. Owens) having been defeated on a vote of the council.

Last Saturday the contest for the Mulholland Cup, presented by Mr. John Mulholland, J.P., owner of the celebrated yacht Egeria, for annual competition between the rowing clubs of Belfast Lough, took place, and was won by the Carrickfergus Amateur Rowing Club, who also carried it off last year.

In the Corporation Hall, Derry, on Monday, the Conservative ladies of Londonderry presented Lord C.J. Hamilton, M.P. for King's Lynn and formerly M.P. for Derry, with an address and testimonial, consisting of a silver inkstand and half a dozen silver candlesticks to match.

THE VIENNA EXHIBITION.

(From our Special Correspondent.)

Vienna, Monday, July 7.

There was a time, before the era of international exhibitions, when English gold and silver smiths, and more especially English jewellers, were unable to compete successfully with those of France and Germany; but that period has gone by, and Great Britain—although the number of its exhibitors of plate and jewellery is much fewer than one could have desired—is admirably represented at the Vienna palace. Perhaps the most interesting display as a whole is that of Messrs. Hancock, whose handsome Gothic case in black and gold, surmounted by the Royal crown and plentifully decorated with armorial emblems, forms an invariable point of attraction in the British section in the nave. Their exhibition, which is strong alike in plate and jewellery, comprises, in the former category, the admirable Tennyson vase, modelled in chased and repoussé oxydised silver by Armistead, and illustrating the death of the blameless King, as sung by Tennyson in the last of his Idylls. Scarcely inferior in interest to this noble work are various spirited conceptions of Signor Monti and some graceful gold and silver jugs and vases—reproductions of ancient classic examples—which form a conspicuous portion of Messrs. Hancock's display. It is in jewellery, however, that they claim to carry off the palm, many of the parures exposed by the Bruton-street firm being unrivalled in the entire exhibition. First, among diamonds, there is Lady Dudley's wondrous "Star of the South," worth a fortune of itself, but with its value considerably enhanced by being set in a tiara of dazzling brilliants. Next comes a superb diamond necklace belonging to the same lady, the pendants of which are as large as pigeons' eggs. Then there is a very elegant suite composed of brilliants and button and pear shaped pearls, comprising a tiara in coronet form, cluster and drop necklace, bracelet, and earrings, the whole valued at £10,000; also a parure of emeralds and diamonds, the tiara of which is most superb, and is justly regarded by Messrs. Hancoc remarkable one, of black pearls and diamonds, arranged in clusters with bows of brilliants, which had excited the admiration of the Empress of Austria, and would in all probability have been bought by her had not Sir Richard Wallace secured it for £3000. Smaller and less valuable, but exceedingly beautiful, ornaments, in sapphires, rubies, coral, and diamonds, abound in Messrs. Hancock's étalage, which furthermore boasts some very fine Etruscan jewellery not unworthy even of Castellani himself.

Messrs. Elkington's display fully sustains their old reputation. Their chefs-d'œuvre are two exceedingly beautiful repoussé vases, due to the talent and patience of a French artist, M. Morel-Ladeuil. The first of these, which has taken six years to produce, is adorned with some exquisite festoons of foliage, while upon a spreading pediment below recline two beautiful female figures, representing Poetry and Music. The second, which is much smaller but not less beautiful, illustrates in a similar manner Art and Science. Everything is so exquisitely delicate in these productions that it is difficult for the uninitiated to believe that such results have been attained solely by the process of hammering up from the reverse side. Having regard to the beauty of the designs and the skill and value of the workmanship, one is scarcely surprised to learn that the price of the larger vase is £6000, and of the smaller one rather more than half that sum. Plate for table services, of a high standard of excellence, is exhibited by Messrs. Elkington with lavish profusion, and in the midst of the brilliant display appear a couple of old friends—the Elcho challenge shield and the international volunteer tro phy Among the novelties exhibited by this enterprising firm are some curious reproductions of Chinese enamel ware, remark-some curious reproductions of Chinese ename ware, remarkably elegant and artistic in execution.

Mr. Thomas, of Old Bond-street, whose case is comparatively small and unpretending, is the exhibitor of a wonderful necklace of twenty large brilliants, each set en solitaire, the value of which is fixed at £35,000. There are earrings and a brilliant cross to match, which bring the price of the whole parure up to something like £50,000. Mr. Thomas further displays a beautiful necklace of pearls of the finest water and the most symmetrical shape, which he spent four years in collecting, together with a splendid large pink pearl and a superborooch of emeralds and diamonds. He also exhibits some cheap jewellery, manufactured expressly to compete with the Austrian handicraftsmen on their own ground, the gold being all of fifteen-carat standard, and cheapness being attained by the lightness of the articles in comparison with more massive productions. On one side of Messrs. Hancock's case Mr. Aitchison, of Edinburgh, whose specialty is Scotch jewellery, exhibits Highland brooches, dirks, and ram's-head snuff-mulls, set with Scotch pearls, pebbles, and cairngorms. One cairngorm which he displays in the rough weighs seven pounds, and is supposed to be the largest yet found.

One cairngorm which he displays in the rough weighs seven pounds, and is supposed to be the largest yet found.

Before quitting the British section in the nave we must not neglect to call attention to the extensive display of carpets made by Mr. John Lewis, of Halitax, whose reproductions, by-the-way, of Oriental types are perfectly unrivalled. His display comprises what are technically termed Royal Wiltons, Anglo-Indians, Axminsters, and Turkeys, and is in every respect an admirable one. From Kidderminster we have six exhibitors, the chief of whom are Gower, Woodward, and Co., who show some specimens of a new variety called the Hohenzollern, and some Brussels and velvet-pile carpets woven without seams; and Humphries and Sons, whose Wilton samples are remarkably fine. Cooke and Law, of London, moreover, have an extensive display, comprising almost every variety of rug and carpet.

At the entry of the southern transverse gallery, and facing one side of Minton's splendid exhibition of artistic pottery and porcelain, stands Pim Brothers and Co.'s large case, around which the Viennese ladies are remarkably fond of congregating of an afternoon, discussing the merits of the single and double, watered and satin-striped, checked and tartan plaid Irish poplins, rich figured terries, and beautiful furniture brocatelles which the firm exhibits. Close by the side of Messrs. Pim's display is the stall of Jacoby and Co., well known for their Nottingham and imitation Valenciennes lace; and a little way lower down the gallery is that of Copestake, Moore, Crampton, and Co., who contribute many charming novelties in the way of lace to the Exhibition.

of lace to the Exhibition.

In front extends the realm of cotton, represented in the various stages of its manufacture and the different purposes for which it serves by ten or twelve important firms. Messrs. Walter Evans and Co., of Derby, who exhibit every kind of sewing cotton and thread, stand undoubtedly pre-eminent in their particular line, although Manchester, Paisley, and Bolton have striven hard to beat them. The chief exhibitors of English longcloths and shirtings are Horrocks, Miller, and Co., of Manchester, whose show is both fine and extensive. Leeds, of course, has its staple trade fully represented; and in no other gallery of the Exhibition will one find such splendid woollen goods as in this British tranverse gallery. There are broad cloths, unions, and meltons, cassimeres, tweeds, and serges, of every variety; imitation furs, comprising astrakan, seal, and otter skins, all of a very high standard of excellence. From cloths the transition to clothes is the natural one, and here one may mention that the unique exhibitor of ready-made masculine garments in the British department is Robert Cumberland, of Paris, who displays English hunting and riding coats, habits, and breeches—which the sporting Hungarian nobles will doubtless make a raid upon when the Prince of Wales revisits Hungary, according to promise, in the autamm, to hunt the fox with them. Poole, the Prince's tailor, is also here, but confines himself to exhibiting a few cloths and an elegant bridal-carriage wrapper, elaborately embroidered with rose, shamrock, and thistle, in light and delicate tints. In hats Christy and Woodhaus and Macqueen are pretty nearly the sole exhibitors. The display of the former, which comprises even policemen's and Indian helmets, railway-guards' caps, &c., is extensive; but that of the latter, limited to felt hats, is by far the finer of the two, both as regards the novelty of the shapes and the excellence of the material and manufacture. Indeed, in goods of this character England remains unsurpassed in the whole Exhibition.

Mr. John Lobb, the Prince of Wales's bootmaker, displays in his case, which stands hard by, a beautiful pair of lady's slippers, on which the Royal arms are elaborately embroidered in coloured silks and gold cord. The Vienness ladies find but one fault with his elegant blue and writes peaks the sake herself with amazement how it is possible for her English sisters to s have striven hard to beat them. It is universally admitted that the machinery exposed by our countrymen in the Agricultural Hall is unrivalled in the entire Exhibition. So incontestable is our supremacy in this department that the British exhibitors have declined to engage our countrymen in the Agricultural Hall is unrivalled in the entire Exhibition. So incontestable is our supremacy in this department that the British exhibitors have declined to engage in the international trials which are now taking place in the environs of Vienna, basing their refusal upon the ground that, were they to compete, it would simply amount to a contest between themselves, as foreign exhibitors would be without a chance. America, the only rival from whom we had anything to fear, offers, comparatively speaking, a very poor display, there being but a few light and ingenious reaping-machines worthy of particular notice. Messrs. Ransome, Sims, and Head make, perhaps, the most conspicuous show in this department of the British section. They send ploughs made specially for Russia, and arranged to turn upon a slight side wheel at the furrow head by a simple movement of the arms; a steam-engine constructed for the consumption of straw instead of wood or coal, also for use in Russia and Hungary; and a thrashing-machine constructed for warm climates, such as Spain, Italy, and the Brazils. Messrs. Fowler exhibit a quantity of machinery made especially for the Archduke Albrecht, among which a gigantic steam-plough with large twin engines, each of 20-horse power, value £2000, is especially worthy of notice. Samuelson and Co., close by, show a clever reaping-machine, which obtained a first prize at an elaborate trial held near Prague in 1872. Marshall and Sons are great in thrashing-machines for hot climates, and Hornsby and Grantham have engines specially suited to mountainous districts such as the highlands of Turkey. The finest engines adapted to agricultural purposes are unquestionably those from the establishments of Clayton and Shuttleworth, and Roby, of Lincoln, those of the former firm—who do a most extensive trade in Austria, having branches at Vienna and Pesth—being remarkable for artistic workmanship, combining lightness with strength, and those of the latter for elaboration of finish.

among the brewers and aerated-water manufacturers, and only a single distiller of note sends samples to the Vienna palace; but our biscuit and pickle manufacturers are represented by names not merely familiar in every English household, but widely known throughout Europe. Huntley and Palmer's handsome case, in which innumerable novelties in the biscuit line are tastefully displayed, attracts a curious crowd around it at all hours of the day, while their celebrated water biscuit have secured the marked honour of the unequivocal approval of the wine-tasting jury. The immense variety of preserved of the wine-tasting jury. The immense variety of preserved fruits and condiments, of sauces and pickles, which Crosse and Blackwell have set out in vases of artistic design and jars of tasteful form and colour, present a display which is certainly unapproached by any other nation. The same firm's samples, unapproached by any other nation. The same mines the too, of vinegar of various shades of colour, which, neither too, of vinegar of various shades of colour, which, neither throughout the process of distillation nor in boiling, is ever permitted to come in contact with any deleterious metallic substance, possess, moreover, a brilliancy and a transparency perfectly unrivalled.

The lion "Wallace," belonging to Mrs. Manders's collection of wild beasts, died yesterday week at Easington, near Durham. The cause of death is stated to have been inflammation of the lungs.

At Dublin the Board of Trade inquiry respecting the loss of the St. Columba resulted in suspension of the captain's certificate for nine months. A similar court at Newcastle condemned the master of the Stornoway, which was lost on the Kentish Knock, to the suspension of his certificate for six months.

The House of Lords sat on Monday as a Committee of Privileges, to decide upon the petition of George Philip Stanhope, cousin of the late Earl of Chesterfield, who claims the earldom and the barony of Stanhope. Their Lordships decided that the claim was proved to their satisfaction.—The Committee then proceeded to consider the claims of the Marchioness of Lansdowne to the Barony of Nairne.

INTERNATIONAL CHESS TOURNEY OF THE VIENNA CHESS SOCIETY.

CHESS SOCIETY.

The following is an abstract of the programme put forth by the directors of this meeting:

Players who wish to take part in the tournament are to send in their names to the secretary, Mr. Ludwig Weinbrenner, 7, Elizabeth-strasse, Vienna, by July 15. Entrance fee, 50 ff. each.

A preliminary meeting of all competitors will take place on July 19, to settle the rules of combat and to pair the combatants.

On July 20 the tournament begins, and it will be continued without interruption to the end.

The number and values of the prizes cannot be definitively fixed by the directors before the meeting, but they can already promise:—First prize—An object of art and a sum of money, valued together at 2000 ff. Second prize—The amount of the subscriptions, at least 600 ft. Third prize—300 ft.

RULES OF THE COMBAT.

1. Each competitor will have to play a match of three games, with

RULES OF THE COMBAT.

1. Each competitor will have to play a match of three games, with every other. The result of this match will be considered as a whole, and to the winner will be accounted one, to the loser nought.

2. The winner of the largest number of matches will receive the first prize, the next one the second prize, and so on.

3. Each match must be finished in two consecutive days.

4. Each player must make not less than twenty moves per hour. The time he saves in the first hours standing to his good for later moves. Intending competitors are recommended to communicate with the directors, who will then take care that they are provided with suitable lodgings at comparatively low prices.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

Arabella Phillis, Lady Newdigate-Ludford-Chetwode, died on the 27th ult. Her Ladyship was married, firstly, to James Reade, Esq., of Lower Berkeley-street, Portman-square; and became, Jan. 17, 1861, the second wife of Sir John Newdigate-Ludford-Chetwode, Bart.

Harriet Mary, Lady Darell, who died, on the 27th ult., at Frimley, Surrey, was the only daughter of the late Sir E. Tierney, Bart.; and was married, in 1843 (she was his second wife), to the Rev. Sir William Lionel Darell, Bart., of Fretherne Court, Gloucestershire, and 29, York-place, Portmansquare. Her Ladyship had two sens and a dayship. square. Her Ladyship had two sons and a daughter.

PRINCE PONIATOWSKI.

Prince Joseph Poniatowski, whose sudden death occurred last week, was born at Rome, in 1816. He was descended from the last King of Poland, although of Italian birth and education. He produced, both in Italy and at Paris, several operas, some of which met with considerable success, particularly "Don Desiderio." During the past few years Prince Poniatowski had been resident in London, where he brought out, in 1871, a grand mass of his composition, of which we have previously spoken. Originally an amateur, the Prince exercised his art as a profession on the loss of his fortune, and was actively engaged up to within a few hours of his death. His annual concert took place at the Drury Lane Opera House, on June 27, when he conducted most of the performances. The funeral of Prince Poniatowski took place, on Tuesday, in the grounds of St. Mary's Catholic Church at Chischlurst. Among those present were many eminent members of the musical profession.

MR. HIRAM POWERS.

MR. HIRAM POWERS.

We have to record the death, at Florence, of Mr. Hiram Powers, the distinguished American sculptor. Mr. Powers was born in 1805, at Woodstock, Vermont, where his parents kept a small farm. At an early age he was thrown on his own resources. After filling various humble situations at Cincinnati, he formed the acquaintance of a Prussian sculptor, from whose instruction he was soon enabled to model busts in plaster of considerable merit. He then superintended the waxwork shows of the Western Museum of that city. In 1835 he removed to Washington, where he executed busts of many of the most eminent Americans of the day. At length he was enabled to carry out a long-cherished scheme of visiting Italy. In 1837 he established himself at Florence, where he since laboured with little interruption. His portrait-busts are highly esteemed, but his fame mainly rests on his ideal works. Of these, "The Greek Slave," which was exhibited in London in the Great Exhibition of 1851, and has since been exhibited throughout the United States, is the most widely-known, if not the best, of Mr. Powers's works. His statue of "Eve" was much admired by Thorwaldsen; and this, with "The Fisher-Boy" and an ideal bust of Proserpine, are in high repute in America.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

WHLES AND BEQUESTS.

The will, with three codicils, of John James Baron Rayleigh, of Terling Place, Essex, who died on June 14, at No. 18, Portland-place, was proved on the 5th ult. by his eldest son, John Wilham, the present peer, the Hon. Arthur Fitzgerald Kinnaird, the Very Rev. John Bramston, and the Rev. Edward Russell Bernard, the executors, the personalty being sworn under £80,000. The testator charges his real estate with £35,000 for his younger children, and, subject thereto, his eldest son takes such real estate under settlement. To his wife he leaves £1000 and certain furniture, and the residue of his personal estate, after payment of some annuities and legacies, to said son. legacies, to said son.

wife he leaves £1000 and certain furniture, and the residue of his personal estate, after payment of some annuities and legacies, to said son.

The will and codicil of Mr. Richard Sumner, of Puttenham Priory, Surrey, the senior magistrate for the county of Surrey, were proved on the 5th ult. by Norton Cornish Sumner, the son, and Emily Catharine Emma Sumner, the daughter, the acting executors, the personalty being sworn under £30,000. The testator devises all his real and leasehold estates to his son for life, charged with annuities of £100 to each of his three daughters, with remainder on the death of the survivor of them, with remainder on the death of the survivor of them to his said son, his heirs and assigns, for ever. His personal estate the testator divides between his son and daughters.

The will and two codicils of Mr. Francis Hastings Toone, late of No. 80, Portland-place, were proved, on the 3rd inst., by Sir William John Walter Baynes, Bart., John Julian, and William Gordon Gordon Cumming, the executors; the personal estate being sworn under £400,000. The will and codicils contain very numerous legacies to relations, friends, and servants; and, among the bequests, the testator gives £2000 to the Establishment for Ladies in Ill-Health, 90, Harley-street; £1000 New Three per Cent Stock to the Middlesex Hospital; £1000 each to the Lock Hospital, the Samaritan Hospital, and the House of Charity, Greek-street, Soho; and £500 each to the Bromley College and the Irish Church Sustentation Fund. He settles on Mr. Arthur Lionel Tollemache certain parts of his estates in Ireland; and the residue of his real and personal estate he leaves to his grandnieces, Agnes Mary Manners Tollemache, Agatha Manners Tollemache, William Stewart, Richard Stephens Taylor, Sir William John Walter Baynes, Clara Oldfield, and William Theed.

The will of Rustomjee Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, of Bombay, Parsee merchant, was proved, in London, on the 13th ult., by Theodore Drumell, the attorney of Bhikyejee, the relict, one of the executors Ashwin, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £80,000. The testator bequeaths annuities to his wife and daughters, ratifies certain gifts of shares and interests in his collieries made in his lifetime, and divides the residue equally amongst his three sons.

The will of General the Hon. Henry Frederick Compton Cavendish was proved on the 3rd inst, the personalty being sworn under £8000. After confirming the settlements on his sworn under £5000. After confirming the settlements on his first and second marriages, the testator bequeaths to his daughter, Caroline Fanny Cavendish, such plate, furniture, and linen as his executors may deem sufficient for a small residence; he then gives to his eldest son, William Henry Frederick Cavendish, all the remainder of his furniture, plate, pictures, books, moneys, stocks, funds, shares, and other securities, horses, carriages, harness, &c.; and his freehold property, with the residue of his personal property, he gives to the Duke of Devonshire and F. J. Howard, Esq., upon trust to pay certain annuities to different members of his family, and to divide the ultimate residue between Colonel W. H. F. Cavendish and his (testator's) three sons by his second marriage.

(testator's) three sons by his second marriage.

The will of Major-General Luke Smyth O'Connor, C.B., was proved on the 24th ult by Ann Mitchell O'Connor, the relict, the sole executor
